As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

Hub Concerts Feature Solos By Each Man

BOSTON, July 19.—(AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to Summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy Winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

This Clipping From Grafton W Va.
Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

Boston Symphony will

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
JUL 19 1943

being "Bester Juengling"), she was very good to hear.

Richard Burgin, playing the solo part in the "Haffner" Serenade, has seldom played with such finesse and such technical assurance, and that on a day when violin strings are about as dependable as gas rations. It was astonishing. The program is to be repeated tonight in the air-conditioned New England Mutual Hall, and it is definitely something to hear.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about —obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping From PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

FREDERICK, MD.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

BRIDGETON, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 20 1943

BENTON HARBOR, MICH.
NEWS-PALLADIUM
JUL 19 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From Clarksburg, W. Va.
Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

Boston, July 19 (AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire Festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tastefully and all of the men performed admirably in the many solo passages.

Other musicians will have further opportunity to hear extended solo work in arias and all fourteen series of concerts ended admirably with a grand finale. [illegible] passages.

[illegible] musicians will [illegible] opportunities [illegible]

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Boston S[illegible] will Give U[illegible]

(By [illegible]
BOSTON [illegible] ght members of [illegible] ny orchestra b[illegible] series of concerts toda[illegible] nks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

Summer reso[illegible] or to formes abroad.

[illegible] musicians, who never [illegible] to play together during [illegible] months in the de[illegible] ordinary combina[illegible] of the pres[illegible] result [illegible] subscribed compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

[illegible] ome True
[illegible] y Players
[illegible] ns Start Unique [illegible] as Problem
[illegible] on Is [illegible] ioning

[illegible] he first concert was devoted en[illegible] ly to Mozart's works, and includ-

[illegible] Musicians
[illegible]

[illegible] ony Orchestra
[illegible] sts' Program
[illegible] s Inaugurate
[illegible] ome Concerts

[illegible] ly to Mozart's works, and in[illegible] ded some of the best of his [illegible] er-known compositions. Boris [illegible] dovsky, noted for his Mozart [illegible] erpretations, conducted for the

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

LONDON, July 17.—The G[illegible] reaction of the Belgians to A[illegible] the unfailing delivery of the G[illegible] to the desk of the G[illegible] occupation troops [illegible] ch fortnight, few e[illegible] resistance make the [illegible] more violently [illegible] ir target, it w[illegible] ritish raid. [illegible] go astr[illegible] the B[illegible] ead [illegible] patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wa[illegible] time restrictions prevented firs[illegible] desk men from making customa[illegible] excursions to the Berkshire fest[illegible] seldom played with such finesse and such technical assurance, and that on a day when violin strings are about as dependable as gas rations. It was astonishing. The program is to be repeated tonight in the air-conditioned New England Mutual Hall, and it is definitely something to hear.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

FREDERICK, MD.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

BRIDGETON, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 20 1943

BENTON HARBOR, MICH.
NEWS-PALLADIUM
JUL 19 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique as Problem on Is ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians Problem

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-Major Piano Concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tastefully and all of the men performed admirably in the many solo passages.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of 14 concerts come to an end.

N, July — eat ing and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

JOE PALOOKA

POPEYE—

SEMINARY

The annual Garrison family reunion was held in the home of Mrs. Flora Cranford, with all five sisters and their brother attending. For many years the Cranford home has been the gathering place for this occasion. Guests were: Mrs. Dora Pearson, Seminary; Mrs. Mary Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Rouse, Lumberton; Dr. and Mrs. Harvey F. Garrison, sr., Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Riley and Irene Riley, Baton Rouge, La.; Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Morin, Miss Tallulah Ann Broadus, Eldon and Cary Broadus, Purvis; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rouse, New Orleans, La.; T. W. Cranford, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Pearson, Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Catt and Sylvia Jean Catt, Madison; Charley Rouse, Lumberton; Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Batson, jr., Jackson; Mrs. J. L. Rogers, Ocean Springs; Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Batson, sr., Wiggins; Nolan Rouse, Lumberton, and Mrs. J. J. Brooks, Oakdale, La.

Mrs. Fannie Napier is in Los Angeles, Calif. for a visit with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Pete Farrara, and the Ray Adairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Newton and

Boston S y will Give U n

(By BOSTON ght members o ny orchestra b e series of concerts toda nks to the ban on pleasure driv g and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19

sic Called Stimulant
Our Armed Forces

cording to Dr. Serge Koustzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music dominant need of our time is a great stimulus for our ting forces and a great hope the future. Of all the arts, ic is a powerful medium inst evil and destruction. It the power to heal, to com-, to inspire. Let music be-e the symbol of the undying ity of the spirit of man," says eminent musician.

Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

LONDON, July 17.—The G e reaction of the Belgians to A he unfailing delivery of t e to the desk of the Ge ccupation troops co ch fortnight, few e esistance make the more violently eir target, it w ritish raid, go astr
the B ad n ra

Ninth

patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wa time restrictions prevented firs desk men from making customa excursions to the Berkshire fest seldom played with such finesse and such technical assurance, and that on a day when violin strings are about as dependable as gas rations. It was astonishing. The program is to be repeated tonight in the air-conditioned New England Mutual Hall, and it is definitely something to hear.

20 — ...
ers of the Boston S orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sky. passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas ll of the men perfor ed in the many solo p ns. Other musicians op her opportunities; usic-solo work before the fourteen concerts c oted and his oris zart the with

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

FREDERICK, MD.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

BRIDGETON, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 20 1943

BENTON HARBOR, MICH.
NEWS-PALLADIUM
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

NEW O

This C
CAM

HAC

July 19

USIC

ELIE, Jr.

phony

n a series of summer ipals and other play-Symphony orchestra. afternoon in Sanders
The soloists were dovsky, soprano; Rich-t, and Boris Goldovsky, ovsky conducted the folprogram:
major (K. 251)
Orchestra
auspieldirektor" (K. 486): ling" ntata, "Dir, Seele de Wel-429): "Dir danken wir die antata, "Davidde Penitente."
"Freudig zum Herrn erho-erenade in D major (K. 250)
Mozart
erto in G major (K. 453)
Mozart

ost apt one-word appraisal
"seersucker symphonies," d yesterday afternoon in s Theater by about 22 prinof the Boston Symphony ora, is most certainly "bravo!"
e series looked exceedingly ap-ing on paper (and how could it otherwise with such an en-ble performing it?), but it proved n more tasty in the fulfilment.
was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, t if summer theater audiences are illing to endure a few extra degrees f Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly ood and sometimes beyond com-are. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, ho conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption series of co

the ban on pleasure driving the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

part Burgin, the orchestra cert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-Major Piano Concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" Serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tastefully and all of the men performed admirably in the many solo passages.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of fourteen concerts comes to an end.

wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted the

The annual Garrison family reunion was held in the home of Mrs. Flora Cranford, with all five sisters and their brother attending. For many years the Cranford home has been the gathering place for this occasion. Guests were: Mrs. Dora Pearson, Seminary; Mrs. Mary Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Rouse, Lumberton; Dr. and Mrs. Harvey F. Garrison, sr., Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Riley and Irene Riley, Baton Rouge, La.; Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Morin, Miss Tallulah Ann Broadus, Eldon and Cary Broadus, Purvis; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rouse, New Orleans, La.; T. W. Cranford, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Pearson, Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Catt and Sylvia Jean Catt, Madison; Charley Rouse, Lumberton; Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Batson, jr., Jackson; Mrs. J. L. Rogers, Ocean Springs; Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Batson, sr., Wiggins; Nolan Rouse, Lumberton, and Mrs. J. J. Brooks, Oakdale, La.

Mrs. Fannie Napier is in Los Angeles, Calif. for a visit with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Pete Farrara, and the Ray Adairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Newton and

SEMINARY

General MacArthur looms as the guidepost to victory in the Pacific.

Boston S will Give U n

(By BOSTON ght members o ny orchestra b e series of concerts toda nks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

ers of the Boston S orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sic Called Stimulant
Our Armed Forces

ecording to Dr. Serge Koustzky, conductor of the Bos- Symphony Orchestra, music dominant need of our time is a great stimulus for our ting forces and a great hope the future. Of all the arts, ic is a powerful medium inst evil and destruction. It the power to heal, to com-, to inspire. Let music be-e the symbol of the undying uty of the spirit of man," says eminent musician.

LONDON, July 17.—The G reaction of the Belgians to A the unfailing delivery of t e to the desk of the G occupation troops co ch fortnight, few e resistance make the more violently
eir target, it w British raid. s go astr
the B ead patterns of symphonic and cham ber work.

The idea developed when wa time restrictions prevented firs desk men from customa excursions to the Berkshire fest sky. passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas of the men perfor
in the many solo p ons.

Other musicians opher opportunities isic-solo work before the fourteen concerts c

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

seldom played with such finesse and such technical assurance, and that on a day when violin strings are about as dependable as gas rations. It was astonishing. The program is to be repeated tonight in the air-conditioned New England Mutual Hall, and it is definitely something to hear.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about —obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

FREDERICK, MD.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

BRIDGETON, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 20 1943

BENTON HARBOR, MICH.
NEWS-PALLADIUM
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

...ias Problem

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19 (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about —obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted the ...out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" Serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurances and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tastefully and all of the men performed admirably in the many solo passages.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of 13 concerts come to an end.

U. S. troops pour onto a Sicilian ... to push Axis forces northward. (Pic...

Patching A "Fort"

Hearing her husband's voice from England was the thrill afforded Mrs. Irving H. Shuffler, 532 Salem avenue, Saturday evening when Technical Sergeant Shuffler, a member of the United States Army stationed in the British Isles, spoke from the Red Cross American Eagle Club. The program was recorded in this country, and rebroadcast over a nation-wide Mutual Network hookup, and through the local radio station.

Sgt. Shuffler, who enlisted 30 months ago, a native of Frederick, is well known in Hagerstown. His wife is the former Margie Morris of this city.

During the interview, Sgt. Shuffler identified himself as a song writer and radio commentator. He is now in the Army's special service division, and his duties include promoting shows for the Army and announcing baseball games.

He said that the British people watch on to the regulations of baseball very quickly, after a ten-minute explanation of the rules.

SEA-DUST
STORY SO SURPRISING YOU'LL SOON REALIZE NOTHING LIKE THIS EVER GOT IN YOUR EYES BEFORE

JOE PALOOKA

POPEYE—

SEMINARY

The annual Garrison family reunion was held in the home of Mrs. Flora Cranford, with all five sisters and their brother attending. For many years the Cranford home has been the gathering place for this occasion. Guests were: Mrs. Dora Pearson, Seminary; Mrs. Mary Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Rouse, Lumberton; Dr. and Mrs. Harvey F. Garrison, sr., Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Riley and Irene Riley, Baton Rouge, La.; Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Morin, Miss Tallulah Ann Broadus, Eldon and Cary Broadus, Purvis; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rouse, New Orleans, La.; T. W. Cranford, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Pearson, Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Catt and Sylvia Jean Catt, Madison; Charley Rouse, Lumberton; Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Batson, jr., Jackson; Mrs. J. L. Rogers, Ocean Springs; Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Batson, sr., Wiggins; Nolan Rouse, Lumberton, and Mrs. J. J. Brooks, Oakdale, La.

Mrs. Fannie Napier is in Los Angeles, Calif. for a visit with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Pete Farrara, and the Ray Adairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Newton and General MacArthur looms as the guidepost to victory in the Pacific.

...sic Called Stimulant Our Armed Forces

...cording to Dr. Serge Koustzky, conductor of the Bos... Symphony Orchestra, music ..., dominant need of our time, ... is a great stimulus for our ...ting forces and a great hope ... the future. Of all the arts, ...ic is a powerful medium ...inst evil and destruction. It ... the power to heal, to com..., to inspire. Let music be ...e the symbol of the undying ...uty of the spirit of man," says ... eminent musician.

...ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

...sky. ... passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perform... in the many solo ...

Other musicians ... her opportunities ... solo work before ... fourteen concerts ...

Boston S... will Give ...

(By ...

BOSTON ... members of ... orchestra b... concerts toda... on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wa... time restrictions prevented firs... desk men from making customa... excursions to the Berkshire fest...

LONDON, July 17.—The G... the Belgians to A... reaction of the B... delivery of t... the unfailing de... desk of the G... occupation troops co... fortnight, few e... resistance make the... more violently. ... British raid, ... go astr... the B... patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

seldom played with such finesse and such technical assurance, and that on a day when violin strings are about as dependable as gas rations. It was astonishing. The program is to be repeated tonight in the air-conditioned New England Mutual Hall, and it is definitely something to hear.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about —obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

FREDERICK, MD.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

July 19?

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra.
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb. And for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique as Problem
on Is ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
Problem

ony Orchestra
sts' Program s Inaugurate
ome Concerts

ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

20 — ... ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sky. ... passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perform... in the many solo p... Other musicians ... her opportunities ... solo work before ... the fourteen concerts ...

ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

tonians subscribed to the series in droves.

Summer resort or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

This Clipping From Clarksburg W. Va.
Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

LONDON, July 17.—The Ga... reaction of the Belgians to A... the unfailing delivery of t... ne to the desk of the G... occupation troops co... ch fortnight, few e... resistance make the... more violently t... eir target, it w... ritish raid, ... go astr... the B... ead t... ra... d...

patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

seldom played with such finesse and such technical assurance, and that on a day when violin strings are about as dependable as gas rations. It was astonishing. The program is to be repeated tonight in the air-conditioned New England Mutual Hall, and it is definitely something to hear.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

FREDERICK, MD.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

Italian Fig
While Rome B
AP Correspo Market Quiud

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb. And for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique
as Problem
on Is ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
Problem

ony Orchestra
sts' Program is Inaugurate
ome Concerts

ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

BOSTON, July 19 — Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began an unusual series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man will appear as a soloist. The programs—the kind real musicians dream about—were designed to present music, old and new, that does not fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented concert soloists from making customary excursions to the Berkshire Festival, the summer resorts or to former homes abroad. Musicians who, during the winter season never had time to play together in out-of-the- ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

20 — ... ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sky. ... passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perform... in the many solo p...

Other musicians ... her opportunities ... solo work before ... the fourteen concerts ...

Summer resort or to former homes abroad.

So musicians, who never had time to play together during busy months in the desired out-of-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

This Clipping From Clarksburg W. Va.
Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

LONDON, July 17.—The Ninth ... reaction of the Belgians to ... the unfailing delivery of ... to the desk of the Ga... occupation troops ... ch fortnight, few ... resistance make the ... more violently. ... eir target, it was ... ritish raid, ... go as ... the B... ad ...

patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

seldom played with such finesse and such technical assurance, and that on a day when violin strings are about as dependable as gas rations. It was astonishing. The program is to be repeated tonight in the air-conditioned New England Mutual Hall, and it is definitely something to hear.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

FREDERICK, MD.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping
OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

...ome True
...y Players
...ns Start Unique
...'ac Problem
...on Is
...ioning

...he first concert was devoted en-
...ly to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
...ny Orchestra
...sts' Program
...s Inaugurate
...ome Concerts

...ly to Mozart's works, and in-
...ded some of the best of his
...er-known compositions. Boris
...dovsky, noted for his Mozart
...erpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb. And for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

...20 — ...ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

...sky. ...woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perform... in the many solo p...

Other musicians ...her opportunities ... solo work before ... fourteen concerts ...

...oted ... his ...oris ...zart ... the ... with ...speculation over possible dark horse entries for the Republican presidential nomination.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, Republican of North Dakota, advanced suggestion that if the choice had to be made at this time, Gen. MacArthur would make "an ideal candidate." He added that the type Nider would make "an ideal candidate." ...

...pick "must await development along the war and home fronts." "If I could name a candidate today," Senator Nye said, "I'd name MacArthur, a veteran of the first World War and ... man up to ...

...Summer resort or to former homes abroad.

...so musicians, who never ...e to play together during ...sy Winter months in the de...red out-of-the-ordinary combina...ns, took ... of the pres...t opportu... ... result ...usicwise Bostonians subscribed ... the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted ...tirely to Mozart's works, and ...luded some of the best of his ...ser-known compositions. Boris ...ldovsky, noted for his Mozart ...erpretations, conducted for the ...st part, changing roles with ...chard Burgin, the orchestra's ...mous concert master, in one ...mber.

...he 20 musicians played beau...lly and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

This Clipping From Grafton W Va.
Sentinel

SYMPHONY CONCERTS UNUSUAL CONCERTS

BOSTON, July 19. (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of 14 concerts end.

"Bester Juengling"), she was ...ood to hear.

...ard Burgin, playing the solo ... the "Haffner" Serenade, has ... played with such finesse and ...echnical assurance, and that ...day when violin strings are ...as dependable as gas rations. ...astonishing. The program is ...repeated tonight in the air-...oned New England Mutual ...nd it is definitely something ...

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

[91]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

This Clipping
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

...ome True
...y Players
...ns Start Unique
...as Problem
...on Is
...ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
Problem

...ony Orchestra
...sts' Program
...is Inaugurate
...ome Concerts

...ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his ...er-known compositions. Boris ...dovsky, noted for his Mozart ...erpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, a... cluded some of ...e b... lesser-known con...positi... Goldovsky, note... for ... interpretations, ...ndu... most part, chang... ... Richard Burgin, the famous concert master, ...ber.

...20 — ... ...ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

...sky. ...woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... ...ll of the men perform... ...ed in the many solo ...ons.

Other musicians op... ...her opportunities ... ...usic-solo work before ... the fourteen concerts ...oted and ...

...Summer resort or to former homes abroad.

...so musicians, who never ...ne to play together during ...y Winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took ... ...e of the present opportu... ... ...d result ...usicwise Bostonians subscribed ... the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted ...irely to Mozart's works, and ...luded some of the best of his ...ser-known compositions. Boris ...ldovsky, noted for his Mozart ...erpretations, conducted for the ...st part, changing roles with ...hard Burgin, the orchestra's ...hous concert master, in one ...ber.

...he 20 musicians played beau...lly and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

This Clipping From Grafton W. Va.
Sentinel

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

"Bester Juengling"), she was ...ood to hear.

...ard Burgin, playing the solo ... the "Haffner" Serenade, has ... played with such finesse and ...echnical assurance, and that ...day when violin strings are ...as dependable as gas rations, ...astonishing. The program is ...repeated tonight in the air-...oned New England Mutual ...nd it is definitely something ...

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

[91]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.

Nazi army, initiators of the offensive, rocking back under sledge hammer blows of the Russian counter-attack which threatened the German base and their hold on the vital Orel-Bryansk railway.

(The Berlin radio said today in a broadcast recorded by the Associated Press that Russian troops launched a violent offensive Sunday in the Velikie Luki sector northwest of Moscow and on the Neva river near Leningrad with support from heavy artillery fire. The Germans said that they had thrown back the Red army men inflicting serious losses including the destruction of 33 Soviet tanks.)

The Soviet midnight communique reported that the Red army had advanced an additional four miles in one sector during the fighting Sunday, capturing several villages and killing about 5,000 German troops.

Heavy Armored Losses

"The battle, which was intended by the Germans to pinch off the Kursk salient and straighten out the line, continued to pile up heavy losses in the Nazi armored and air divisions, the Russians said. They announced they had knocked out 78 tanks and 137 planes on Saturday and said an incomplete check

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls." (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente." (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb. And for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique as Problem
on Is ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included

Musicians Problem

ony Orchestra
sts' Program
is Inaugurate
ome Concerts

ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his er-known compositions. Boris dovsky, noted for his Mozart erpretations, conducted for the BOSTON, July 19.—(AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a novel series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

Wartime restrictions had prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to Summer resorts, or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy Winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

This Clipping From Grafton W. Va.
Sentinel

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

BOSTON, July 19.—(AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a novel series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

Wartime restrictions had prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to Summer resorts, or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy Winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sky. ... passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perform... in the many solo ...

Other musicians ... her opportunities ... solo work before ... fourteen concerts ...

speculation over possible dark horse entries for the Republican presidential nomination.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, Republican of North Dakota, advanced suggestion that if the choice had be made at this time, Gen. MacNider would make "an ideal candidate." He added that the type candidate the Republicans should pick "must await development along the war and home fronts."

"If I could name a candidate today," Senator Nye said, "I'd name MacNider, a veteran of the First World War and man up to ...

"Bester Juengling"), she was good to hear.

Richard Burgin, playing the solo in the "Haffner" Serenade, has played with such finesse and technical assurance, and that day when violin strings are as dependable as gas rations, astonishing. The program is repeated tonight in the air-toned New England Mutual and it is definitely something ...

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

[91]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

W ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From Grafton W Va.
Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

July 19

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique
as Problem
on Is ioning

he first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
Problem

ony Orchestra
sts' Program s Inaugurate
ome Concerts

ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the t's cap?

ough the clouds et night fighters inflicting serious losses including
The destruction of 33 Soviet tanks, reported that the Red army had advanced an additional four miles in one sector during the fighting Sunday, capturing several villages and killing about 5,000 German troops.

Heavy Armored Losses

The battle, which was intended by the Germans to pinch off the Kursk salient and straighten out the line, continued to pile up heavy losses in the Nazi armored and air divisions, the Russians said. They announced they had knocked out 78 tanks and 137 planes on Saturday and said an incomplete check bers of the Boston symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts Monday — thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire festival —in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out of the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity and, as a result, music wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

ser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas[illegible] of the men perform[illegible] in the many solo [illegible]

Other musicians [illegible] her opportunities [illegible] solo work before [illegible] fourteen concerts [illegible] speculation over possible dark horse entries for the Republican presidential nomination.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, Republican of North Dakota, advanced suggestion that if the choice had be made at this time, Gen. MacNider would make "an ideal candidate." He added that the type candidate the Republicans should pick "must await development along the war and home fronts."

"If I could name a candidate today," Senator Nye said, "I'd name MacNider, a veteran of the First World War and man up to ers of the Boston S[illegible] orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sky. [illegible] passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas[illegible]

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Summer resort or to former homes abroad.

[illegible]so musicians, who never [illegible]e to play together during [illegible]y Winter months in the de[illegible]ed out-of-the-ordinary combina[illegible]ns, took [illegible] of the pres[illegible] opportu[illegible] a result [illegible]sicwise Bostonians subscribed [illegible] the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted [illegible]irely to Mozart's works, and [illegible]luded some of the best of his [illegible]ser-known compositions. Boris [illegible]dovsky, noted for his Mozart [illegible]erpretations, conducted for the [illegible]st part, changing roles with [illegible]hard Burgin, the orchestra's [illegible]ous concert master, in one [illegible]ber.

[illegible]he 20 musicians played beau[illegible]lly and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky "Bester Juengling"), she was [illegible]ood to hear.

[illegible]ard Burgin, playing the solo [illegible] the "Haffner" Serenade, has [illegible] played with such finesse and [illegible]chnical assurance, and that [illegible]ay when violin strings are [illegible]s dependable as gas rations. [illegible]astonishing. The program is [illegible]epeated tonight in the air[illegible]med New England Mutual [illegible]d it is definitely something [illegible]

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about —obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

This Clipping From Grafton W. Va.
Sentinel

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)

Three Arias with Orchestra

From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"

From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"

From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"

"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart

Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

...ome True
...y Players
...ns Start Unique
...as Problem
...on Is
...ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians Problem

...ony Orchestra
...sts' Program
...s Inaugurate
...ome Concerts

...ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his ...er-known compositions. Boris ...dovsky, noted for his Mozart ...erpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

...ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

...sky. ...woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perfor... in the many solo p...

Other musicians ... her opportunities ... solo work before ... the fourteen concerts ...

Summer reso... or to for... mes abroad.

...so musicians, who never ...e to play together during ...y Winter months in the de...ed out-of-the-ordinary combina...ns, took a... ...e of the pres... opportu... ...d result ...sicwise Bostonians subscribed ... the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted ...tirely to Mozart's works, and ...luded some of the best of his ...ser-known compositions. Boris ...dovsky, noted for his Mozart ...erpretations, conducted for the ...st part, changing roles with ...hard Burgin, the orchestra's ...ous concert master, in one ...ber.

...e 20 musicians played beau...ly and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

"Bester Juengling"), she was ...od to hear.

...ard Burgin, playing the solo ... the "Haffner" Serenade, has ...played with such finesse and ...chnical assurance, and that ...ay when violin strings are ...s dependable as gas rations. ...astonishing. The program is ...epeated tonight in the air...ned New England Mutual ...d it is definitely something ...

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

This Clipping From Grafton W. Va.
Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb. And for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

SIMPLICITY

Boston (AP) — Topflight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts yesterday—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea devoleped when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire Festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opoprtunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

placed us seven miles below report, not confirmed, su elements had penetrated to the city's suburbs.
Offshore, British naval units continued to throw shells into the city and Axis positions. The city already was a shambles from shell and bomb and many fires were raging.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique
as Problem
on Is ioning

he first concert was devoted en-ly to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
Problem

ony Orchestra
sts' Program
is Inaugurate
ome Concerts

ly to Mozart's works, and inded some of the best of his er-known compositions. Boris dovsky, noted for his Mozart erpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sky. ... passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perform... in the many solo p...

Other musicians ... ther opportunities ... solo work before ... fourteen concerts ...

speculation over possible da... horse entries for the Republic... presidential nomination.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, Repu... can of North Dakota, advanced suggestion that if the choice had be made at this time, Gen. M... Nider would make "an ideal car... date." He added that the type candidate the Republicans sho... pick "must await developme... along the war and home fronts."

"If I could name a candidate ... day," Senator Nye said, "I'd na... MacNider, a veteran of the fi... World War and man up to ...

Summer resort or to formes abroad.

so musicians, who never le to play together during y Winter months in the de- red out-of-the-ordinary combina- ns, took ... e of he pres- t opportu... d result usicwise Bostonians subscribed the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted irely to Mozart's works, and luded some of the best of his ser-known compositions. Boris dovsky, noted for his Mozart erpretations, conducted for the st part, changing roles with hard Burgin, the orchestra's ous concert master, in one ber.

he 20 musicians played beau- lly and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

This Clipping From Grafton W Va.
Sentinel

"Bester Juengling"), she was ood to hear.

ard Burgin, playing the solo the "Haffner" Serenade, has played with such finesse and chnical assurance, and that ay when violin strings are s dependable as gas rations. astonishing. The program is epeated tonight in the air- ned New England Mutual d it is definitely something ...

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

[91]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
JUL 20 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From Grafton W. Va.
Sentinel
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

July 19

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique
as Problem
on Is ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
Problem

ony Orchestra
sts' Program
is Inaugurate
ome Concerts

ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

[91]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 19 1943

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 19 1943

ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE
JUL 19 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
JUL 19 1943

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
JUL 20 1943

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
JUL 20 1943

of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts yesterday—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea devoleped when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire Festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opoprtunity, who turn out the guns, the millions is a host illions in maintenance ar" can be misleading.

e impression that everynd take a shot at the armed forces, very few ooting.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 19 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
JUL 19 1943

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From CAMBRIDGE, MD.
BANNER
JUL 19 1943

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
JUL 19 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
JUL 19 1943

HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 19 1943

This Clipping From SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1943

MUSIC

July 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Summer Symphony

The first concert in a series of summer concerts by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was given yesterday afternoon in Sanders theater, Cambridge. The soloists were Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Boris Goldovsky, pianist. Mr. Goldovsky conducted the following all-Mozart program:

Divertimento in D major (K. 251)
Three Arias with Orchestra.
From "Der Schauspieldirektor" (K. 486): "Bester Jungling"
From the Cantata, "Dir, Seele de Weltalls," (K. 429): "Dir danken wir die Freude"
From the Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," (K. 469): "Freudig zum Herrn erhoben"
"Haffner" Serenade in D major (K. 250) Mozart
Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453) Mozart

The most apt one-word appraisal of the "seersucker symphonies," launched yesterday afternoon in Sanders Theater by about 22 principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is most certainly "bravo!"

The series looked exceedingly appetizing on paper (and how could it look otherwise with such an ensemble performing it?), but it proved even more tasty in the fulfilment. It was hot, of course; hot as Tophet, but if summer theater audiences are willing to endure a few extra degrees of Fahrenheit, should it be said music lovers are not as hardy? A chorus, let ue hope, of nevers!"

As the program was devoted wholly to Mozart, and just about the best of Mozart's lesser-known work at that, the orchestra was perfectly proportioned, there being 13 strings, and a pair each of oboes, flutes, bassoons and horns. As the performers were mainly the first-desk musicians of the Boston Symphony, the quality of performance was exceedingly good and sometimes beyond compare. Moreover, as Boris Goldovsky, who conducted, is noted for his Mozart scholarship, the tempos, the nuances, the contrasts and the sudden bursts of humor were entirely right.

It is true he might have overstressed the quality of humor a bit, for Mozart's wit seldom needs quite so much emphasis, but better that way, surely, than to have it buried completely. In the enchanting G major Piano Concerto (conducted by Richard Burgin), he was superb, and for once we were all able to hear the extraordinary beautiful woodwind texture of the score.

Margaret Codd Goldovsky, making her first public appearance here, proved to be an accomplished, well-schooled singer. Her voice was light but exceptionally true, and she took the coloratura passages with flexibility and grace. She had, moreover, more than fleeting touches of the true Mozart style. While there were occasional moments of forcing, and her diction was not always wholly clear (a distinct exemption

ome True
y Players
ns Start Unique
as Problem
on Is ioning

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and includ-

Musicians
Problem

ony Orchestra
sts' Program
is Inaugurate
ome Concerts

ly to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the

Every Musician Is Soloist In Unique Concert Series

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 19.—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today, thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival, in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs, the kind real musicians dream about, obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUN

Summer resort or to formes abroad.

so musicians, who never had time to play together during winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky

This Clipping From Grafton W. Va.
Sentinel

20 — ... ers of the Boston S... orchestra began a unique series of 14 concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works.

sky. ... passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias tas... of the men perform... in the many solo p...

Other musicians ... her opportunities ... solo work before ... the fourteen concerts ...

SYMPHONY CONCERTS UNUSUAL CONCERTS

BOSTON, July 19. (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. The 20 musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of 14 concerts end.

Juengling"), she was ... ear.

...in, playing the solo ...ffner" Serenade, has ...th such finesse and ...surance, and that ... violin strings are ...ble as gas rations. ... The program is ...night in the air- ... England Mutual ...nitely something

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-major piano concerto, Mr. Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Mr. Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

Music Called Stimulant For Our Armed Forces

According to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music is a dominant need of our time. "It is a great stimulus for our fighting forces and a great hope for the future. Of all the arts, music is a powerful medium against evil and destruction. It has the power to heal, to comfort, to inspire. Let music become the symbol of the undying beauty of the spirit of man," says this eminent musician.

Boston Musicians Solve No Gas, No Berkshire Festival Problems

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON, July 19, (AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs — the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during

(Continued from page one)

busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result music-wise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN 26 1943

RECORDS

OUR text for today is this paragraph from a recent review: "Vladimir Golschmann, who conducted the fifth and last of the season's Serenades at the Museum of Modern Art last night, would seem to be the legitimate successor to Pierre Monteux (rarely heard here any more) in the French style of orchestral interpretation. Only one of the works . . . was of French origin; but all were rendered with that care for tonal delicacy and rhythmic solidity, for sensuousness, logic, and emotional dignity that mark the work of the best French orchestral maestri. For balance, precision, and an authority at once gracious and steely we have had no one like him here in recent years."

Words to make my tongue hang out of my mouth as I rushed, first, to Carnegie Hall to hear Monteux's first broadcast concert with the New York Philharmonic a few weeks ago. As it happened, I retained a twenty-year-old recollection of the silvery sound and beautiful finish of the Boston Symphony's playing under his direction until Koussevitzky's arrival; and on records recently there had been a couple of fine-sounding and well-proportioned performances with the San Francisco Symphony. I went, therefore, with expectations of good things to be heard; and these expectations were satisfied for a few minutes by the sound of "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the opening of the Overture to "Euryanthe." But then I began to hear things which made me wonder whether I was imagining them, until I knew beyond possibility of doubt that I really was hearing a coarseness and raucousness from woodwinds and brass individually and in groups that was without precedent in my experience of major orchestras led by major conductors. And there was no mistaking the faulty structural logic in the performances caused by the unsteadiness of pace, the disproportionate accelerations and retardations, crescendos and decrescendos. There are possible explanations of the technical defects: with an additional two or three hours of rehearsal Monteux might have achieved beauty of sonority and finish. But the musical defects represented only his own musical judgment, his own sense for structural proportion.

Then Golschmann. There was for years in the Columbia catalogue his performance of the Haydn Symphony No. 103 with the St. Louis Symphony, which was one of the worst performances on records. A year ago Victor issued a recording of his performance of the Couperin-Milhaud "La Sultane" music; and though one might suspect that Victor's recording engineers were responsible for some of the beauty of sound there was no doubt that the orchestra also was playing very beautifully. Next came the superbly recorded performance of Sibelius's Seventh Symphony, which had every appearance of a copy of Koussevitzky's performance—the result being an effective statement of the work, in which, however, one could perceive the absence of the refinements of sonority, execution, and style that Koussevitzky had achieved. And now comes a Victor set (942, $2.53) of Golschmann's performance of Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony." The recording engineers were less successful this time: the sound is marvelously spacious and distinct and true to timbre, but hard and brash. Even with its defects it is vastly better reproduction of orchestral sound than comes off the old Victor records of Koussevizky's performance; but what is poorly reproduced on these records is a performance that is right in pace, relaxed in feeling, marvelously beautiful in sonority and finish; whereas Golschmann's performance sounds as though he had decided this time to do everything differently from Koussevitzky: the first movement is slower, and comes out tensely over-deliberate; the second is much slower, and comes out dragging; the last movement is faster, an attempt at even more breath-taking virtuosity, and comes out over-driven and strained; and the result of this lack of "logic and emotional dignity" and of "balance, precision, and an authority at once gracious and steely," is a lack also of "tonal delicacy" and the like. But it is possible, of course, that all these succulent qualities were there to be heard at the Museum concert.

Also on Victor's June list is a Corelli Concerto in C major for organ and strings, edited by Malipiero, and played by E. Power Biggs with Fiedler's Sinfonietta (Set 492, $2.63). The music is characteristically engaging and lovely; the performance is straightforward and adequate, except for the heavily insensitive playing in the closing Allegro; and it is reproduced with the harshness of many of the Fiedler Sinfonietta recordings that were made a few years ago. The Concerto takes three sides; and on the fourth side is a little Corelli Sonata in D major for strings and organ—also quite engaging, adequately performed, and harshly recorded.

Columbia offers Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, performed by Mitropoulos with the Minneapolis Symphony (Set 540, $4.73). The work makes pleasant listening when it is suitably played; but Mendelssohn is not a composer for the tense, hard-driving style of Mitropoulos; and the orchestral sound which comes off the records is limited in range at both ends and badly balanced, so that the violins are too weak and are muffled and harsh in quality.

On a Columbia single disc (71463-D, $1.05) Egon Petri plays Busoni's piano transcriptions of Bach's Chorale-Preludes "Ich ruf' zu Dir," "In Dir ist Freude," "Wachet auf," and "Nun freu't euch, lieben Christen." The writing for piano is thick and muddy; and further lack of clarity is created at times by the playing and by the poorly balanced recording.

As its record classic for June and July Columbia has chosen another of the outstanding items in its catalogue—the two volumes of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos played by the Busch Chamber Players (Nos. 1-4 in Set 249, $8.67; Nos. 5-6 in Set 250, $6.83). The best works of the group are in Volume I; but even the ones I care little for—Nos. 1, 5, 6—I enjoy listening to in these wonderful performances that were recorded (in England) with such clarity, balance, and beauty of sound.

Several years ago my interest in a program that comprised a Bach Toccata, a Mozart Sonata, and Beethoven's "Diabelli" Variations led me to attend the recital of a pianist whose playing I knew nothing about. And what I heard caused me to write: "Set down Webster Aitken's debut . . . as one of the most notable events of this or any season; for it presented . . . a young man who is already a matured pianist, musician, and artist. . . ." Mr. Aitken is to play the "Diabelli" Variations at the Frick Collection on June 27; and it is something you would do well to hear.

This Clipping From DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK
JUL 19 1943

Chu-Chú the Statistician

Somebody besides Oscar Levant played Gershwin at the Lewisohn Stadium's annual all-Gershwin concert last week in New York. And played him with the dash and fire which once made the composer himself say after hearing his "Rhapsody in Blue": "My God, my arms ache just from listening."

Somebody's name is Jesús María Sanromá, but that is not his fault. The Puerto Rican pianist wishes people would understand about it. Once, when he was touring with Jacques Thibaud as the French violinist's accompanist, the local management in a Middle Western town announced that Sanromá would either have to be J. M.

Newsweek

Chu-Chú played his 74th "Rhapsody"

Sanromá, or Thibaud could get himself another accompanist. Again, when he was to play before the Harvard Musical Association, a member said he would resign before anybody with that name made sacrilege of the Association's sacred halls. Ladies still write in and say he ought to be ashamed. What they don't understand, sighs Sanromá, is that in Spanish-speaking countries Jesús is as common a first name as John. Maybe, he says hopefully, they would settle for Chu-Chú, which is the nickname for all good Jesúses.*

Sanromá lives in Boston now and has played with the Boston Symphony more than any other soloist. And besides being the best-known Puerto Rican musician in this country, he is known to phonograph-record collectors as one of the most prolific of Victor artists. He has made sixteen albums in all—everything from the Gershwin Rhapsody and Concerto to all kinds of chamber music.

His performance at the Stadium last week was, incidentally, his 290th with orchestra, his 74th rendition of the Rhapsody, and his 17th of the Concerto. A gay little man who adores making bad puns, Sanromá—underneath his pianistic fervor—is a bookkeeper at heart. In four little black books he keeps track of everything: one for chamber-music performances, one for orchestra, one for recordings, and one which tells everywhere and when he has played. For example, in twenty performances in the last two months Sanromá has given eleven different works complete with orchestra. He can tell a radio engineer that it takes him fifteen minutes to play a certain Bach Two Piano Concerto in C—provided, of course, that the first 166 measures of 4-4 time are played with the metronome set at 104 to the quarter note.

*His full name is Jesús María del Carmen José y Joaquin Sanromá y Torra de la Riba Porta Ripoll y Ramos Viader Casanovas y Gay.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
JUN 20 1943

MOZARt CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

A new series of concerts by the principals and other players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by other groups, by various soloists and enlisting the services of a half-dozen conductors, had an auspicious beginning at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon. The all-Mozart programme, conducted by Boris Goldovsky and (in one number) by Richard Burgin, will be repeated at Boston's New England Mutual Hall this evening. In all there will be seven pairs of these concerts devoted to works suitable for chamber orchestra, to chamber music and compositions for chorus.

To put it alliteratively, too much minor Mozart may make for monotony and that factor was not altogether absent yesterday. On the other hand there was much that was rewarding and much that had the interest of novelty, since one aim of this war-born summer series is to present music, old and new, that lies off the beaten track. After the first number, the only moderately engrossing Divertimento in D major (K. 251), Margaret Codd Goldovsky, in private life Mrs. Boris Goldovsky, made her local debut in three little known arias. Two of these were from cantatas and one from the little opera "Der Schauspielddirektor," or as it is sometimes called, "The Impressario." This last, of brilliant character, was familiar Mozart, but one could detect an unaccustomed voice in the excerpts from "Dir, Selle des Weltalls" and "Davidde Penitente." Mrs. Goldovsky sang these numbers competently, even expertly, but with a tone that verged on the metallic.

The one conventional item of the afternoon, three movements from the "Haffner" Serenade, featured Mr. Burgin as the violin soloist, required by the score, and, considering the difficulties of playing a stringed instrument on so hot and sticky an afternoon, he acquitted himself well. In what was said to be the first performance hereabouts of the Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453), Mr. Goldovsky and Mr. Burgin exchanged roles. Though much of interest and value had gone before, this concerto furnished the true climax of the concert. Why a piece of such poetry and beauty, with such dramatic fire and such originality of harmony and instrumentation, should be neglected is another of the many mysteries of the concert-room. Mr. Goldovsky, who had already proved himself an accomplished conductor, again disclosed himself as a delightful pianist. The excellent playing of the small orchestra may be taken for granted. An audience, which by no means filled the hall, plainly enjoyed itself in spite of the heat, a considerable tribute to music and performance.

Mrs. Goldovsky contributed an aria each from "Der Schauspieldirektor" and the cantatas, "Dir, Seele des Weltalls" and "Davidde Penitente.' She has a small, lyric soprano of not much distinction or color, and she attacked high notes explosively. The external correctness of her phrasing, style and fioriture suggested careful teaching, but I felt in her singing little warmth or spontaneity.

The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30 in New England Mutual Hall, Boston.—C. W. D.

MUSIC

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concert

It was hot as blazes yesterday, but a sizable audience arrived at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, for the first concert of seven pairs to be given by first-desk men and other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This initial program was devoted to Mozart and it was conducted by Boris Goldovsky who, though not a member of the Boston Symphony, is a prominent figure in Boston music. It was also the occasion of the first public appearance here of the conductor's wife, soprano Margaret Codd Goldovsky.

First came the D major Divertimento (K. 251), which is longish Mozart, and after awhile came the "Haffner" Serenade (K. 250), which is better Mozart. Richard Burgin was a superb violin soloist for the Serenade, as well as an excellent conductor of the G major Piano Concerto (K. 453) in which Mr. Goldovsky relinquished the conductor's stand for the keyboard.

In geenral the playing was the sort to come from Boston Symphony men, although a horn burbled in the Serenade, and there were ragged attacks and entrances by other instruments. These last may, I think, be attributed to Mr. Goldovsky's wide and showy gestures, which seemed to upset the orchestra.

As pianist, however, Mr. Goldovsky was at the top of his form, playing fluently and gracefully, with great refinement of style and phrasing, and he decidedly relished the witty last movement.

This Clipp
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 30 1943

CONCERT SERIES SLATED IN AUGUS

Pittsfield, July 30—Wealthy residents of Lenox including a larg group of summer visitors have under written the four concerts and a lecture that are to be given at Sedgwick hall, Lenox, next month under auspices of the Koussevitzky Musi foundation with the assistance o members of the Boston Symphon orchestra. Tickets for the series wil be $5 and for a single concert, $1.50 The hall has seating capacity of 300, so it is expected the International Red Cross, sole beneficiary, will receive at least $1500.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is at Seranak, Lenox, is to be in charge and the performers will be J. M. Sanroma, R. Burgin, A. Kripps and J. Bedetti with these two soloists, Jennie Tourel, mezzo-soprano, and L. Bernstein, pianist.

The performances will be on the following dates:—

August 11, Burgin String quartet; August 18, J. M. Sanroma; August 23, vocal and violin concert with Jennie Tourel and Richard Burgin; August 27, Dr Koussevitzky's interpretive lecture, illustrated with Leonard Bernstein at the piano; September 1, Burgin quartet with Sanroma.

Roy Harris Accepts Fellowship at Colorado

Roy Harris, noted American composer, has resigned as composer-in-residence at Cornell university, to accept a fellowship at Colorado college, Colorado Springs.

Dr Harris became associated with Cornell two years ago under a three-year Carnegie grant for creative work in music. He was released so that he could accept the appointment to Colorado under a creative fellowship given by the El Pomar foundation.

While at Cornell he composed numerous works, including his Fifth Symphony, the first fifth symphony composed by an American. It received its world premiere on February 27 performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The composer is now at work on the sixth symphony, which will have a choral accompaniment. He is at Colorado Springs where he will assume his post in September. World premiere, by way of the Blue network, of the sixth, will take place in April, 1944, and will be played by the Boston Symphony, with Dr Koussevitzky conducting. It will be based on a critical period of the Lincoln era, one which typifies the present crisis.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUL 21 1943

For the LOVE of MIKE

TITLE REG U S PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

ANN TENNA SAYS: "Have you heard about the radio performer who thought he needed glasses because all he could see were sustaining spots before his eyes?"

* * *

BOTH the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Symphony, long-time sustaining program, shortly will announce that they have secured air sponsors. And in those announcements will be added indication that symphonic music has at last come into its own in radio. Sponsors are giving the go-by to the once all-powerful swing bands and are buying the musicians who play Bach, Beethoven and Brahms.

Symphony music has been building for years. The reason that sponsorship was lacking before is that many groups refused to be subsidized unless the product they were to advertise was in keeping with the dignity of the performance. Now, more than ever, many companies seek just good will and institutional rather than product advertising on the air. Those are the companies which are putting up the money so that dialers can continue to hear good music.

* * *

The new trend towards symphonic music, already previously indicated by the sponsorship of the NBC Symphony and the N. Y. Philharmonic orchestras, probably is partly occasioned by the fact that most youngsters are off to the wars. Those left behind are the older, more matured folk who find symphonic music more to their liking than jitterbug rhythms.

Symphonic music has long been a growing factor in all network programming. The listeners are the ones who dictate the type of program to be aired. Now they want symphony, so they're getting symphony.

The Musical Forecast
PITTSBURGH, PA.

* * *

Recently, in a letter to the "New York Times" concerning the American composer, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has this to say: "If the present-day composer is not dying of heartbreak and hunger, he has, nevertheless, to struggle along and earn his living through other ways and sources other than his God-given gift; as a composer he cannot make a living. He is forced to go out and teach, lecture and crowd his days with trifling obligations which kill his time, his energies, his creative art."

* * *

True it is that there are several foundations which offer annual prizes for major orchestral and chamber music works but there is no provision made, or movement in that direction, to guarantee gifted composers the necessities of life so that they maye devote their time exclusively to the creation of music. Finland is the only nation in the world whose government was far-visioned enough to endow it's foremost composer Jean Sibelius.

Sunday Concert Series Brings Heat Relief

Delightful Program At Sanders

Again last Sunday the Boston Symphony offered to war-working and heat-weary Cambridge a much-needed afternoon holiday. Under the direction of Bernard Zighera, the second in the "Symphonette Series" of seven, received enthusiastic applause from a really delighted audience at Sanders Theatre.

The program was made up of appropriately light music. (It is hardly the weather for a series of Beethoven and Brahms symphonies.) Opening with "Toccata, Bouree, and Giga" by Scahlatti-Casella, the orchestra also played Schubert's Fifth Symphony, Ravel's "Pavane pour une Infante defunte", Ibert's "Capriccio", and Stravinsky's "Suite No. 1 from 'Pulcinella,' Ballet (after Pergolesi)".

The next program, Sunday, August 1, offers the contrast of the very old and the very modern. The first part will be played by the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera conducting, and will be made up of 16 and 17 century music. Handel's "Sonata in C major" will be played, while the other pieces are all by pre-Bach composers such as Couperin, Purcell, and Orlando Gibbons.

The second part of the program, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, includes nothing written earlier than 1817. It includes four symphonies by Milhaud, a suite from "The Wind Remains" by Bowles, and "Concerto for Orchestra in E-flat" by Stravinsky.

Dallas, Tex.
Morning News
July 20, 43

Every Symphony Player a Soloist

BOSTON, Mass., July 19 (AP).—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts Monday—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUL 9 - 1943

Staid Boston Gasps at Symphony Hall Hot Jive Program

Boston, July 9.—(AP)—The rarity of hot jazz notes echoing from Symphony Hall startled staid Bostonians last night.

It was Fort Devens night at the "Pops" concert, and at the conclusion of the regular program the fort's reception centre sextet gave out with the jumpin' jive for the entertainment of the "Pops" orchestra and 1635 WACS, Army officers and enlisted men.

Features of the regular program were a solo "Concerto for the Clarinet," by Mozart, by Private David Glizer, and the first performance by the "Pops" orchestra, under the leadership of Arthur Feilder, of "There's a Plane in the Sky," written by Master Sgt. Alexander Steinert, of Boston.

BOSTON DAILY GLOBE AUGUST 23, 1943

MUSIC

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concert

A little-known Symphony of Joseph Haydn was given probable first performance hereabouts in Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon, at the sixth of the concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Edgar Curtis, a young student conductor who has been a Koussevitzky pupil, directed. The program included Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll," the Piano Quintet, Op. 57, by Shostakovich, and excerpts from the "Water Music" by Handel.

The little Haydn Symphony is in B-flat, and is designated that composer's Op. 10, No. 2. Its orchestration requires two horns and two oboes in addition to strings, and it is only 10 minutes long. Some had supposed that two of the three movements had been written by Haydn's brother Michael. But Hans Gal, who edited the score in 1939, and the late music scholar, Sir Donald Tovey, were convinced the wor is pure Joseph Haydn. It sounc like early and very pleasant Hayd in its fleet first movement and final and in the melodically naive slo movement.

Shostakovich's Quintet was give a superb performance by the Burgi Quartet (Richard Burgin, Alfre Krips, Jean Lefranc and Jean B detti) and pianist Jesus Maria Sa roma. The Quintet is certainly t long, but it is just as certainly mus of exceptional merit and beauty, cast in a novel sequence of forms.

Mr. Curtis has shown his talents for conducting and his general musicianship at concerts he has given with his amateur string orchestra. It is no disparagement to say that the Boston Symphony men led him rather than he led them. Young conductors make their way, gain their experience and authority not by conducting crack orchestras, but with less expert organizations.

C. W. D.

CAMBRIDGE CONCERT

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The greatly improved atmospheric onditions may have had something to o with it, but it seemed to this observ- that the fifth programme of the oston Symphony's new summer series, heard at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon was the est to date, and each of the others has ad much to recommend it. The conuctor yesterday was G. Wallace Woodorth and in addition to the customary nall orchestra, he had at his comand the summer chorus of Harvard d Radcliffe. Together with Margaret odd Goldovsky, soprano, these student ngers took part in a performance of Mozart's seldom heard cantata, "Regina oeli."

An admirable work, admirably perormed by all concerned, this cantata as not the only unfamiliar music of e afternoon. Indeed, it has been the ance to hear the unusual that has ade these summer concerts so valule. Mr. Woodworth's first semi-novy was Bach's Prelude to the cantata, h hatte viel Bekuemmernis," scored oboe and strings. Here is Bach at most treasurable and in the half rchly surroundings of the Harvard auditorium, this beautiful and moving music was heard to wonderful advantage.

The remaining novel item was Haydn's Symphony No. 80 in B minor, composed about 1783 or, roughly speaking, 10 years earlier than the 12 "London" Symphonies, by which Haydn is best known today. Yet here and there this earlier work seemed more striking than its celebrated successors. Few of Haydn's symphonies are written in the minor mode, and this of itself, lent a certain distinction to the fiery opening Allegro and to the Minuet. Minor minuets are rare enough, but the most arresting movement was the Finale with its baffling rhythm and its curious foreshadowings of all sorts of later tendencies. To Mr. Woodworth much thanks, not only for the pieec itself, but for the fine performance.

Between them Bach and Mozart furnished the rest of the programme. From the former came the Third Brandenburg Concerto and from the latter the Serenade known as "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." To each of them the smaller string orchestra proved singularly flattering. When 60 or 70 men get sawing away on the Third Brandenburg with its pounding rhythms, its intricate counterpoint, there is always a faint suggestion of the power house. At New England Mutual Hall this evening this delightful concert will come to a second hearing.

...AL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL - - 1943

NEW SERIES PLANNED BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Works in Smaller Forms to Be Presented Under Several Conductors This Summer

BOSTON.—The Boston Symphony will launch a new venture during July and August with series of programs composed of works in the smaller forms.

Because all principals are this year available for the entire Summer for perhaps the first time since the organization of the orchestra sixty-two years ago, these players, plus others of the orchestra will offer a double series of seven programs in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on successive Sunday afternoons at 4:30, beginning July 18. Each program will be repeated the following Monday evenings at 8:30 in New England Mutual Hall, beginning July 19. The double series will continue each week, the final pair being given on Aug. 29-30.

A different conductor will be in charge each week, and those now announced include Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony and assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky, Boris Goldovsky, Bernard Zighera, Georges Laurent, G. Wallace Woodworth, Edgar Curtis and Leonard Bernstein.

Soloists announced include Jesus Maria Sanroma and Mr. Goldovsky, pianists, Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, and members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

MUSIC

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concerts

G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Boston Symphony's fifth pair of concerts of music in the smaller forms, has gone back to the classic masters for his program. He has delved among the works of Bach, Haydn and Mozart and produced two which are fondly considered favorites, three which are quite unfamiliar.

The concerts begin—the first at Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon, the second at New England Mutual Hall this evening—with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto for Strings, played by the combination of instruments which Bach probably had in mind. According to that wise and practical musicologist Donald Tovey, 11 instruments—three each of violins, violas and cellos, plus bass and harpsichord—were about right. And that is the combination which Mr. Woodworth uses.

The effect is extraordinary. Rhythms, although more delicately adjusted, are more clearly followed. The harmonic mass has transparency in place of a lugubrious richness. Bach sounds the way one feels Bach ought to sound, although there is no real criterion for such a judgment.

From the brightness of the Brandenburg Concerto, Mr. Woodworth went to the solemn grandeur of the Prelude to Bach's Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis," and on to Mozart's effervescent "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" Serenade.

After the interval, Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang in good style and Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society assisted in the performance of Mozart's Cantata (K. 108) "Regina Coeli," a baffling work of genius, for its depth and beauty would never reveal that its author was only 15 at its composition. Mrs. Goldovsky sang in ood style and with tonal warmth, although she was often overbalanced by the orchestra.

The program closed with a recently discovered Symphony of Haydn, No. 80 in D Minor. It is a witty little piece, actually a chamber symphony having many a good barrel organ tune.—(J. W. R.)

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 27 1943

Koussevitzky Will Direct Lenox Concerts

Series To Be Given at Sedgwick Hall in August

LENOX—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will direct a series of five concerts next month in Sedgwick Hall under the auspices of the Lenox Library Association.

This was decided at a meeting of the association yesterday afternoon, at which Mrs. William Norton Bullard, president, presided. Proceeds will be given worthy charities and organizations, particularly the International Red Cross.

The dates and further details concerning the concerts will be announced. Dr. Koussevitzky is spending several weeks at Seranak, his summer home.

The concert series is another of many cultural projects to be sponsored by the library association for local residents and those of surrounding communities. Several sculpture classes are being conducted at the library for adults and children under the direction of Miss Franc Epping, noted sculptor. Last winter a Spanish course, supervised by Robert W. Woodworth, proved successful.

The tentative program will consist of two chamber music concerts, the presentation of a singer, a violinist, the Bergen quartet and a demonstration and talk by Dr. Koussevitzky on interpretation and appreciation. A pianist will demonstrate. It is expected that the first concert will be on the evening of Aug. 11.

Miss Irene M. Poirier, librarian, with whom Dr. Koussevitzky first discussed the possibilities of such a program called the meeting yesterday afternoon.

While the committee have not yet been named it has been decided that the tickets will be sold only in advance by a committee headed by Miss Poirier. Others already named to represent communities are Miss Anna Alexandre, Lenox, Miss Alice Clapp, Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Mrs. John C. Lynch, Stockbridge; Mrs. Charles F. Bassett,

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUL 21 1943

For the LOVE of MIKE

TITLE REG U S PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

ANN TENNA SAYS: "Have you heard about the radio performer who thought he needed glasses because all he could see were sustaining spots before his eyes?"

• • •

BOTH the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Symphony, long-time sustaining program, shortly will announce that they have secured air sponsors. And in those announcements will be added indication that symphonic music has at last come into its own in radio. Sponsors are giving the go-by to the once all-powerful swing bands and are buying the musicians who play Bach, Beethoven and Brahms.

Symphony music has been building for years. The reason that sponsorship was lacking before is that many groups refused to be subsidized unless the product they were to advertise was in keeping with the dignity of the performance. Now, more than ever, many companies seek just good will and institutional rather than product advertising on the air. Those are the companies which are putting up the money so that dialers can continue to hear good music.

• • •

The new trend towards symphonic music, already previously indicated by the sponsorship of the NBC Symphony and the N. Y. Philharmonic orchestras, probably is partly occasioned by the fact that most youngsters are off to the wars. Those left behind are the older, more matured folk who find symphonic music more to their liking than jitterbug rhythms.

Symphonic music has long been a growing factor in all network programming. The listeners are the ones who dictate the type of program to be aired. Now they want symphony, so they're getting symphony.

The Musical Forecast
PITTSBURGH, PA.

AUG - - 1943

* * *

Recently, in a letter to the "New York Times" concerning the American composer, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has this to say: "If the present-day composer is not dying of heartbreak and hunger, he has, nevertheless, to struggle along and earn his living through other ways and sources other than his God-given gift; as a composer he cannot make a living. He is forced to go out and teach, lecture and crowd his days with trifling obligations which kill his time, his energies, his creative art."

* * *

True it is that there are several foundations which offer annual prizes for major orchestral and chamber music works but there is no provision made, or movement in that direction, to guarantee gifted composers the necessities of life so that they maye devote their time exclusively to the creation of music. Finland is the only nation in the world whose government was far-visioned enough to endow it's foremost composer Jean Sibelius.

Sunday Concert Series Brings Heat Relief

Delightful Program At Sanders

Again last Sunday the Boston Symphony offered to war-working and heat-weary Cambridge a much-needed afternoon holiday. Under the direction of Bernard Zighera, the second in the "Symphonette Series" of seven, received enthusiastic applause from a really delighted audience at Sanders Theatre.

The program was made up of appropriately light music. (It is hardly the weather for a series of Beethoven and Brahms symphonies.) Opening with "Toccata, Bouree, and Giga" by Scahlatti-Casella, the orchestra also played Schubert's Fifth Symphony, Ravel's "Pavane pour une Infante defunte", Ibert's "Capriccio", and Stravinsky's "Suite No. 1 from 'Pulcinella,' Ballet (after Pergolesi)".

The next program, Sunday, August 1, offers the contrast of the very old and the very modern. The first part will be played by the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera conducting, and will be made up of 16 and 17 century music. Handel's "Sonata in C major" will be played, while the other pieces are all by pre-Bach composers such as Couperin, Purcell, and Orlando Gibbons.

The second part of the program, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, includes nothing written earlier than 1817. It includes four symphonies by Milhaud, a suite from "The Wind Remains" by Bowles, and "Concerto for Orchestra in E-flat" by Stravinsky.

Dallas, Tex.
Morning News
July 20, 43

Every Symphony Player a Soloist

BOSTON, Mass., July 19 (AP).—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts Monday—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the canceling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUL 9 - 1943

Staid Boston Gasps at Symphony Hall Hot Jive Program

Boston, July 9.—(AP)—The rarity of hot jazz notes echoing from Symphony Hall startled staid Bostonians last night.

It was Fort Devens night at the "Pops" concert, and at the conclusion of the regular program the fort's reception centre sextet gave out with the jumpin' jive for the entertainment of the "Pops" orchestra and 1635 WACS, Army officers and enlisted men.

Features of the regular program were a solo "Concerto for the Clarinet," by Mozart, by Private David Glizer, and the first performance by the "Pops" orchestra, under the leadership of Arthur Fiedler, of "There's a Plane in the Sky," written by Master Sgt. Alexander Steinert, of Boston.

BOSTON DAILY GLOBE AUGUST 23, 1943

MUSIC

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concert

A little-known Symphony of Joseph Haydn was given probable first performance hereabouts in Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon, at the sixth of the concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Edgar Curtis, a young student conductor who has been a Koussevitzky pupil, directed. The program included Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll," the Piano Quintet, Op. 57, by Shostakovich, and excerpts from the "Water Music" by Handel.

The little Haydn Symphony is in B-flat, and is designated that composer's Op. 10, No. 2. Its orchestration requires two horns and two oboes in addition to strings, and it is only 10 minutes long. Some had supposed that two of the three movements had been written by Haydn's brother Michael. But Hans Gal, who edited the score in 1939, and the late music scholar, Sir Donald Tovey, were convinced the wor is pure Joseph Haydn. It sounc like early and very pleasant Hayd in its fleet first movement and final and in the melodically naive slo movement.

Shostakovich's Quintet was give a superb performance by the Burgi Quartet (Richard Burgin, Alfre Krips, Jean Lefranc and Jean B detti) and pianist Jesus Maria Sa roma. The Quintet is certainly t long, but it is just as certainly mus of exceptional merit and beauty, cast in a novel sequence of forms.

Mr. Curtis has shown his talents for conducting and his general musicianship at concerts he has given with his amateur string orchestra. It is no disparagement to say that the Boston Symphony men led him rather than he led them. Young conductors make their way, gain their experience and authority not by conducting crack orchestras, but with less expert organizations.

C. W. D.

CAMBRIDGE CONCERT

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The greatly improved atmospheric conditions may have had something to do with it, but it seemed to this observer that the fifth programme of the Boston Symphony's new summer series, heard at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon was the best to date, and each of the others has had much to recommend it. The conductor yesterday was G. Wallace Woodworth and in addition to the customary small orchestra, he had at his command the summer chorus of Harvard and Radcliffe. Together with Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, these student singers took part in a performance of Mozart's seldom heard cantata, "Regina Coeli."

An admirable work, admirably performed by all concerned, this cantata was not the only unfamiliar music of the afternoon. Indeed, it has been the chance to hear the unusual that has made these summer concerts so valuable. Mr. Woodworth's first semi-novelty was Bach's Prelude to the cantata, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis," scored for oboe and strings. Here is Bach at his most treasurable and in the half [illegible] surroundings of the Harvard auditorium, this beautiful and moving music was heard to wonderful advantage.

The remaining novel item was Haydn's Symphony No. 80 in B minor, composed about 1783 or, roughly speaking, 10 years earlier than the 12 "London" Symphonies, by which Haydn is best known today. Yet here and there this earlier work seemed more striking than its celebrated successors. Few of Haydn's symphonies are written in the minor mode, and this of itself, lent a certain distinction to the fiery opening Allegro and to the Minuet. Minor minuets are rare enough, but the most arresting movement was the Finale with its baffling rhythm and its curious foreshadowings of all sorts of later tendencies. To Mr. Woodworth much thanks, not only for the piece itself, but for the fine performance.

Between them Bach and Mozart furnished the rest of the programme. From the former came the Third Brandenburg Concerto and from the latter the Serenade known as "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." To each of them the smaller string orchestra proved singularly flattering. When 60 or 70 men get sawing away on the Third Brandenburg with its pounding rhythms, its intricate counterpoint, there is always a faint suggestion of the power house. At New England Mutual Hall this evening this delightful concert will come to a second hearing.

...AL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL - - 1943

NEW SERIES PLANNED BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Works in Smaller Forms to Be Presented Under Several Conductors This Summer

BOSTON. — The Boston Symphony will launch a new venture during July and August with series of programs composed of works in the smaller forms.

Because all principals are this year available for the entire Summer for perhaps the first time since the organization of the orchestra sixty-two years ago, these players, plus others of the orchestra will offer a double series of seven programs in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on successive Sunday afternoons at 4:30, beginning July 18. Each program will be repeated the following Monday evenings at 8:30 in New England Mutual Hall, beginning July 19. The double series will continue each week, the final pair being given on Aug. 29-30.

A different conductor will be in charge each week, and those now announced include Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony and assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky, Boris Goldovsky, Bernard Zighera, Georges Laurent, G. Wallace Woodworth, Edgar Curtis and Leonard Bernstein.

Soloists announced include Jesus Maria Sanroma and Mr. Goldovsky, pianists, Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, and members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

MUSIC

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concerts

G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Boston Symphony's fifth pair of concerts of music in the smaller forms, has gone back to the classic masters for his program. He has delved among the works of Bach, Haydn and Mozart and produced two which are fondly considered favorites, three which are quite unfamiliar.

The concerts begin—the first at Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon, the second at New England Mutual Hall this evening—with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto for Strings, played by the combination of instruments which Bach probably had in mind. According to that wise and practical musicologist Donald Tovey, 11 instruments—three each of violins, violas and cellos, plus bass and harpsichord—were about right. And that is the combination which Mr. Woodworth uses.

The effect is extraordinary. Rhythms, although more delicately adjusted, are more clearly followed. The harmonic mass has transparency in place of a lugubrious richness. Bach sounds the way one feels Bach ought to sound, although there is no real criterion for such a judgment.

From the brightness of the Brandenburg Concerto, Mr. Woodworth went to the solemn grandeur of the Prelude to Bach's Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis," and on to Mozart's effervescent "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" Serenade.

After the interval, Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang in good style and Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society assisted in the performance of Mozart's Cantata (K. 108) "Regina Coeli," a baffling work of genius, for its depth and beauty would never reveal that its author was only 15 at its composition. Mrs. Goldovsky sang in ood style and with tonal warmth, although she was often overbalanced by the orchestra.

The program closed with a recently discovered Symphony of Haydn, No. 80 in D Minor. It is a witty little piece, actually a chamber symphony having many a good barrel organ tune.—(J. W. R.)

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 27 1943

Koussevitzky Will Direct Lenox Concerts

Series To Be Given at Sedgwick Hall in August

LENOX—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will direct a series of five concerts next month in Sedgwick Hall under the auspices of the Lenox Library Association.

This was decided at a meeting of the association yesterday afternoon, at which Mrs. William Norton Bullard, president, presided. Proceeds will be given worthy charities and organizations, particularly the International Red Cross.

The dates and further details concerning the concerts will be announced. Dr. Koussevitzky is spending several weeks at Seranak, his summer home.

The concert series is another of many cultural projects to be sponsored by the library association for local residents and those of surrounding communities. Several sculpture classes are being conducted at the library for adults and children under the direction of Miss Frane Epping, noted sculptor. Last winter a Spanish course, supervised by Robert W. Woodworth, proved successful.

The tentative program will consist of two chamber music concerts, the presentation of a singer, a violinist, the Bergen quartet and a demonstration and talk by Dr. Koussevitzky on interpretation and appreciation. A pianist will demonstrate. It is expected that the first concert will be on the evening of Aug. 11.

Miss Irene M. Poirier, librarian, with whom Dr. Koussevitzky first discussed the possibilities of such a program called the meeting yesterday afternoon.

While the committee have not yet been named it has been decided that the tickets will be sold only in advance by a committee headed by Miss Poirier. Others already named to represent communities are Miss Anna Alexandre, Lenox, Miss Alice Clapp, Curtis Hotel, Lenox, Mrs. John C. Lynch, Stockbridge, Mrs. Charles F. Bassett,

MUSIC OF THE MAESTROS OF YORE

Living Conductor Discusses Nature of Performances of Years Ago

By OLIN DOWNES

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY passing through the city gates last week, referred to the Petrillo ban on record making and to the associated problem of a revision of the copyright laws to deal with performers' royalties from records used for broadcasting purposes. But he soon digressed from this phase of the subject to an artistic consideration which is near his heart, namely, the effect that the advent of the records will have on all music history and upon the future of interpretation.

"Remember," he said, "that a wholly new epoch is introduced in the musical art by the invention of the record. Only from this moment, as a matter of fact, has the art a living history! Remember that we of today can merely speculate upon the character of performances of music antedating the period of the Renaissance. We do not even know with any precision how Bach and Handel sounded to their contemporaries. We are not even assured of the facts of the most recent aspects of music—the art of the modern conductor.

Art Evolves

"I have been witness to the changes which have occurred in this art, even within my own lifetime, and we all know the discussions of tempo that were rife, and the 'traditions'—founded on fact or fancy—of a former generation; take, for example, the alleged tempo of Wagner and the alleged tempo of Mendelssohn in the Allegretto of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony.

"Supposing our information on this subject to be correct, and not misconception of a tradition about a tradition, which means merely the gradual distortion of original facts repeated without reliable evidence of their accuracy in successive decades—suppose this, what shall we say of these tempi?

"You remember Wagner's repeated criticisms of Mendelssohn for his fast tempi. We cannot examine them today in the light of the immutable evidence that the record will furnish the future of the interpretations of the great musicians of this period. But it is generally agreed that Mendelssohn's tempo was faster in the Allegretto movement than that which is common today, while most conductors keep closely to the traditionally slower tempo of Wagner.

Wagner Tradition

"If we could only reproduce these two interpretations! We would have, in the first place, the priceless treasure of Beethoven's music as it filtered through the minds of two very great musicians of the generation that followed him. We also would be in a far better position to decide for ourselves, and come to a clearer and better oriented choice of the tempo for this music.

"And it is very possible that we would not precisely agree with either version. I know the common acceptance of the Wagner tradition in this movement. Everyone who knows the master's words on the subject, and has taken to heart the example that he, the first great modern conductor, set, when he sought the melodic essence of a movement—the 'melos'—as basis for his tempo, accepts the principle. But how shall we of today apply it?

"Was Mendelssohn wrong? Take the specified passage at the beat that history relates of his performance. The music has then a marvelous radiance and a mercurial wit—the same music which becomes a trifle heavier, if also more virile, in the Wagner conception. But we have only the accounts of these interpretations. We have not the truth of the performances.

"And there's the rub. We of today can never experience them. We certainly can never inform ourselves of the actual life and nuance, as he revealed it, of this music, nor can we sense the 'feel' of that music as it impressed Wagner's generation. All these things the record could give us.

Recollection of Nikisch

"And that question of the reaction of successive generations to music of their past is of the utmost importance. In fact we cannot know the musical art in its present significance and meaning until we have such a knowledge of its organic history.

"For interpretation, the language of music itself changes with localities and races and civilizations.

"I had the honor and privilege of studying the conductor's art with Arthur Nikisch, perhaps the greatest orchestral interpreter, let us say, after Wagner. Technically as well as poetically he was, to my mind, the leading conductorial genius of his day. And it was sheer genius. It was that indescribable and unmanufacturable quality that makes the interpreter whose intuition pierces to the very root of a musical masterpiece, and that inexplicably, by some flash of the will and the spirit that cannot be projected by merely technical means, makes every player of the orchestra a sovereign interpreter and participant in the creative effect of the performance.

Virtuoso Conductor

"Very well! But I would not swear that Nikisch's style today would be accepted as whole heartedly as it was in his lifetime. Why? Because I think we have become more classical.

"Perhaps you think it is only in our period that the so-called 'virtuoso conductor' takes liberties with tempi, constantly changing them, often changing them in ways not indicated, or even suggested, by the letter of the score?

"I assure you that this is not a contemporaneous invention. Quite the contrary. I think it was Wagner, with his genius for the musical truth, and his creative attitude toward all interpretation, who definitely launched the conception of highly individualized orchestral interpretation. His greatness, his perceptive passion for his art revolutionized the modern methods of orchestral conducting. But it also carried the insidious poison, if it is to be called that, the seductive perceptive of tempi and nuances altered at will, and a kind of interpretation sensitized and personalized to an intoxicating extent, possible only with the modern orchestra. This potency has been terribly abused.

"Nikisch was another Titan who had instinctive and imperious mastery of the baton, the soul of a evocative, artist and romanticist, whom conservative critics flayed for his treatment of certain classical scores. Then it was that Weingartner made his reputation, basically upon the fact that he cultivated classic proportion and restraint, and proceeded without license. Some called him cold. He was lofty, a believer in ideal balance and beauty, and his influence did much to swing the conductors back to a more conservative standard. In this respect, too, the young Weingartner was in some sort a prophet of the neoclassicism which became first a principle and then a fad of modern music and interpretation as well.

Music Has Data

"The pendulum constantly swings with each age that passes, and we see in perspective certain periods of art, separated from each other by centuries, which correspond in their tendencies. Be sure the conductor's methods will modify with those of all other makers and performers of music.

"For the interpretation of musical score can never rest, in the final analysis, upon mere historical data, or even mere correctness and precision in translating the symbols on the printed page into sound. A performance of that kind is precise, euphonious, yet artificial. It may be accurate as a reflection in a mirror. But that is not the source of art. That is not the organic life, the 'élan vital' of music. Always, in our individual artistic progress and in the evolution of the thought and spirit of society, the art of musical composition and the parallel art of musical interpretation will change. But in the future we will have a degree of orientation and direction in our progress that we could not have in the long ages when musical performance vanished with the moment when it was given. From now on music has history, data, records."

MUSIC

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concert

Two classicists bracketed a pair of moderns in the program of chamber music for wind and string instruments which members of the Boston Symphony played at Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon. Georges Laurent, solo flute of the Orchestra, supervised the program.

Mozart, Piston, Roussel and Beethoven (in that order) presented a nice set of contrasts in style and period. But they made delectable Summer listening because of their single similarity: each in its own temperament benefited by the light touch—that rare thing so often the touch of greatness, too.

Mozart was never more ingratiating than in the Quartet in D major (K. 285) for flute and strings, unless in the Quartet in A major for the same combination. Both sparkle with sheer wit and felicitous turn of phrase. Take it from one who has played, but never heard the D major in performance: Messrs. Laurent, Burgin, Lefranc and Bedetti realized the ideal.

Walter Piston put his dry and crackling humors to work in what he calls "Three Pieces." Written for flute, clarinet and bassoon, they sort of cackle along like disgruntled hens. But they are a lot of sport.

Not all of Roussel's Serenade, Op. 30, for flute, string trio and harp is essentially frivolous; nor, for that matter, is all of any of these four works completely light in tone. The Roussel has moments of limpid beauty and certain purple patches. But its Gallic urbanity cannot escape the listener.

The program closed in fitting fashion with Beethoven's exhuberant Septet, Op. 20, for clarinet, horn, bassoon, string trio and bass. This was Beethoven's concession to the musical conventions of his time. It is direct and charming music, bursting with bright tunes and the spirit of fun. Only briefly, in the two final sections, is the work at all clouded. But these are passing references.

Everybody, including a benevolent weather man, must have been in the right frame of mind for yesterday's concert. The Boston Symphony players turned out this music with lively fancy. Spirited applause from a fair-minded audience was the proof of a grand musical afternoon. The program will be repeated at New England Mutual Hall this evening.—J. W. R.

CLOSE SERIES OF CONCERTS

Symphony Players Repeat Pleasing Programme

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

With a repetition at New England Mutual Hall this evening of the programme heard at Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon, the Symphony Orchestra's new series of concerts "by the principals and other players" will come to a close. Taken as a whole, these seven pairs of concerts have been decidedly rewarding. If some merely served to fill agreeably the passing moment, others were truly memorable and furnished more satisfaction even than many a concert by the full orchestra. On the conducting side the doors were thrown open to promising talent but, for the most part, the leaders were men of both skill and experience.

In the latter class falls, of course, Richard Burgin, who conducted yesterday afternoon a group of some 25 strings in Schoenberg's transcription of his early sextet, "Verklaerte Nacht"; the Largo mesto from C. P. E. Bach's Concerto for cello and strings, with Jean Bedetti as soloist, and in an arrangement for string orchestra, presumably Mr. Burgin's own, of Beethoven's String Quartet in A minor, Opus 132.

Of his appearances in this capacity at the Symphony Concerts it seems to be always possible to say of Mr. Burgin that as conductor he steadily grows in stature. Yesterday again the same observation might well be made. In Schoenberg's "Transfigured Night" he displayed a passionate intensity of which one would hardly have believed him capable, and his colleagues responded with a performance that quite literally held the audience spellbound. Other qualities were demanded by the younger Bach's gravely beautiful slow movement and by the great music of Beethoven, and in neither case was Mr. Burgin found wanting.

It would be an interesting trick of fate if "Verklaerte Nacht," with its extensive leanings on the Wagner of "Tristan," on Mahler and, in less degree, on Strauss, should prove the most enduring of Schoenberg's works. To date it is the only one that has really achieved currency in the concert hall. Once more the music of C. P. E. Bach, nobly played in this instance by Mr. Bedetti and the others, seemed prophetic not so much of the later 18th century as of the 19th. It was a bold act to wrest this deepest, most profound of the Beethoven Quartets from its original frame but, as the performance proved, an almost wholly successful one. And opportunities to hear this marvelous music in any guise are none too

FOURTH SERIES BY SYMPHONY

Concert Given at Sanders Theatre

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The fourth of the series of concerts "by the principals and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon, enlisted only these same principals and was confined to chamber music. With a programme prepared by George Laurent, it closely resembled the Sunday afternoon concerts of the now disbanded Boston Flute Players' Club. Most, if not all the numbers, had been heard here under those auspices.

There was a part for flute, and hence for Mr. Laurent, in three of the four items: Mozart's Quartet for flute and strings, K. 285; Walter Piston's three pieces for flute, clarinet and bassoon, and Roussel's Serenade, Opus 30, for flute, violin, viola, 'cello and harp. These three compositions solved in various ways the dual problem of sound and song. There was certainly more of the former than of the latter in Mr. Piston's work, which interested chiefly as a study in sonorities. These were handled with the composer's familiar mastery. Of the three divisions, the final Allegro seemed the most satisfactory all around. The composer, who was present, was obliged to bow his acknowledgements.

The flute blends less well with strings than does the clarinet, oboe or bassoon. In the first movement of Mozart's Quartet that instrument stands out like the proverbial sore thumb, but the Adagio, in which it is accompanied by pizzicato chords of the violin, viola and 'cello, is delightful and by the very nature of the form the combination works better in the Rondo than in the more argumentative first movement.

In Roussel's Serenade a better balance is struck between the purely musical and the sonorous elements. Roussel's melodic inspiration was not too copious, but the Serenade is one of his more genial efforts.

For a final and satisfying conclusion there came the one completely successful composition of the afternoon, Beethoven's early Septet, a piece of considerable celebrity that is nevertheless not often encountered. We are told that the continued popularity of the piece greatly irked Beethoven when he rightly felt that he had outgrown it. One can sympathize with him and also with those who delighted in his adroit handling of clarinet, horn, bassoon, violin, viola, 'cello and bass. Considering who the performers were it is hardly necessary to add that this and every number was played to a T. The programme will be repeated this evening at New England Mutual Hall.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 1 - 1943

Koussevitzky Will Conduct 5 Lenox Concerts

First of Series Scheduled for Aug. 11; Golf Tourney Prizes To Be War Bonds

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 31.—The Red Cross is one of several organizations that will benefit from a series of five concerts to be given during the month starting Aug. 11 at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, by a group of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting. On the committee are Mrs. William Norton Bullard, chairman; Miss Irene W. Poirer, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mmes. David T. Dana, F. Griswold Hollister, Donald F. McPherson, John L. Senior, Bruce W. Sanborn, John C. Lynch, Egbert C. Leonard, Charles Franklin Bassett, Lawrence K. Miller, Joel Martin and Miss Alice C. Clapp.

A community concert conducted by Mr. Roger W. Wellington, of Pittsfield, was held at Curtis Hotel, Lenox. In the audience were Miss Emma Eames, operatic prima donna; Mmes. E. Hope Gammell Slater, George William Douglas, E. Griswold Hollister, George F. Munn, David Dows; the Misses Matilda E. Frelinghuysen, Eleanor LeRoy, Olive C. Colton and Harriet K. Welles.

War bonds will be prizes at the annual Pittsfield Country Club two-day golf tournament starting next Saturday. Entrants will be guests of the club at a tournament dinner Friday and the tournament ball will be held Saturday. The club is on two public bus lines, a mile from the civic center on the road to Lenox. Mr. Hale Holden is tournament chairman.

Mrs. Henry Ware Eaton, New York, has arranged a memorial service tomorrow at the Congregational Church, Monterey, for her grandfather, the Rev. Winthrop H. Phelps, who was minister there from 1856 to 1864. Dr. Marshall Bidwell, of Philadelphia, is to be organist. Miss Anne Crews, of Raleigh, N. C., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Eaton at Brookmead.

MUSIC

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concert

Summer is nearing its end, and so is the series of chamber concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The final program, conducted by Richard Burgin, was given at Sanders Theatre in Cambridge, yesterday afternoon, and its repetition tonight at New England Mutual Hall will end the series.

Mr. Burgin led 26 string players in Schoenberg's "Transfigured Night," the Largo mesto from K. P. E. Bach's Concerto No. 3, with Jean Bedetti as cello soloist, and the A minor Quartet, Op. 132, of Beethoven. Had the printed music of Shostakovich's Two Pieces for String Octet, Op. 11, arrived in time, that music would have begun the program. It did not, so they were omitted.

Musicians and concert-goers have felt that the last quartets and piano sonatas of Beethoven strove to say more than their medium could express. Felix Weingartner orchestrated the "Hammerklavier" Sonata; the Grosse Fuge has been done by massed instruments, and certain of the quartets have been performed with several strings taking each voice.

Orchestrating chamber music is one thing, but playing quartets by multiple strings has much to recommend it. Additional volume is possible, and the implied breadth of Beethoven's thought is given more scope. Dimitri Mitropoulos carried off the C-sharp minor Quartet, Op. 131, successfully, and in the main, the A minor Quartet sounded full and rich without seeming inflated. Yet the adagio did not respond to this treatment so well as the faster movements, and gave the impression of being pretentious.

Mr. Bedetti accomplished some marvelous cello playing in the lovely music of Johann Bach's most famous son, with a tone of indescribable richness, color and intensity. Under Mr. Burgin's excellent guidance, the orchestra played beautifully apart from a few moments of less than absolute unanimity.—C. W. D.

Esplanade Concert's One Rule

Boston Sunday Globe Aug 1 1943

IRRITATION DOESN'T BOTHER CONCENTRATION

The youthful music lover at the left isn't missing a note as he scratches a bite. His four-footed pal, also, is devoting two good ears to the appreciation of fine music.

There is just about one rule governing Esplanade concerts. Forget about fuss and feathers, don't worry about how to dress—just come to enjoy to music, and to let everyone else enjoy it. That is probably one reason for the concerts now being in their 15th season, with greater popularity and greater attendance than ever.

Simple as Your Yard

It probably accounts also for more men turning up at these outdoor concerts by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Symphony musicians than are usually observed listening to symphonic programs. In the matter of dress, a man can come on a strictly "as is" basis, confident that from 5000 to 25,000 people won't give a hoot whether his suit is out of press or not. Furthermore, he can listen to the music through his own tobacco smoke. That alone has removed a great deal of the anticipated agony of getting acquainted with Bach, Beethoven and Brahms.

Men must suffer from concert hall claustrophobia. Those who have balked for years against going with good grace, or at all, to a concert auditorium, cheerfully expose themselves to musical classics on the Esplanade.

The auditorium is simply three acres of uninclosed grass. If you are early enough you won't see a single chair on an acre. It is as simple as walking into your own yard. If you want, you may sit down on the grass right then and there, and on through the concert.

Around 50 individuals like to arrive about two hours before a concert and, besides staking a claim to the front edge of the grounds, enjoy a snack supper and catch up on the day's newspaper, the most-discussed book, or the latest issue of condensed reading.

All ages, all sorts, are found in the happy throngs which assemble six nights a week before the Hatch Memorial shell, and on Wednesday mornings for the children's programs. (It's 7:30 to 9 each night except Monday, through Aug. 18, and 10:30 a. m. on Wednesdays.) You will see whole families, from the grayheads to the sweethearts, to the grandchildren—all costumes, from Palm Beach suits to overalls, to uniforms, to diapers. No matter who you are, everybody gets an equal chance to hear "the best orchestra in the world."

Nobody, by the accident of social position or the possession of a big bank accounts, can buy a reserved seat. There are none for sale. Years before the "good neighbor" policy became a political phrase the idea was part and parcel of the Esplanade Concerts. That principle was respected by Gov. Saltonstall when he attended the opening performance of this season. While newspaper photographers were awaiting his arrival at the front of the shell concertgoers in the rear ranks of the audience awoke to the fact that he had quietly sat down among them—right on the grass, and no chair, thank you.

Democracy at Work

Here are democracy and the freedoms at work. Freedom is the rule on the programs, too. As long as the music is superior it matters not whether it be composed by Jew, Gentile, a citizen of the United Nations or an "enemy nation."

It is a perpetually amazing sight to watch the transition of the Esplanade Concert grounds from three acres of grass to that space with the addition of one short row of super-early arrivals, to an assemblage of from 5000 to 25,000 listeners in orderly self-arranged rows.

About a quarter of a million persons attend the Esplanade Concerts each season. The total by now is upwards of 3,000,000. The total cost has been about a quarter of a million dollars. Most of this was supplied by contributions of checks by mail and coins on the grounds, to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, in custody of the Merchants National Bank. A share of the dime rentals for chairs now goes to the fund. Annotated programs are available free of charge—but "you may contribute something if you wish"—and almost everyone wishes.

It might easily be supposed that such very large audiences would be their own worst enemy to concentrated listening. Far from it. As a visiting musician once graphically, if awkwardly, remarked:

"There is such a quiet in that audience that I would not have believed it if I had not listened to it myself."

THE CONCERTS ARE PREEMINENTLY DEMOCRATIC

Gov. Saltonstall (center), seated on the grass in preference to a chair, and to the rear of the concert grounds, instead of up front. At the left is Nelson Curtis, secretary of the Metropolitan District Commission. At the right is State Police Sergt. Larivee.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS LIGHT

AUG - 1943

AS A MATTER OF RECORD

Record fans may choose between Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra when they buy discs which offer "Sunday, Monday Or Always" and "If You Please," both hit tunes from the motion picture "Dixie." Crosby, who sang the tunes in the picture, is aided by the Ken Darby Singers in his Decca waxing.

Sinatra, the new "croon king" sings the hit tunes on a Columbia disc. Like Crosby, he is minus orchestral accompaniment, and in lieu thereof, he employs a bit of chorus work around the edges.

Bob Wills and his Texas Playboys are featured in a new Okeh release which couples "Miss Molly" and "The Lone Prairie," and "Home in San Antone." Leon McAuliffe and Danny Alguire share the vocal spots.

In serious vein, Helen Traubel, soprano, joins Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra in singing three of the best known Wagnerian love songs (two 12-inch discs, in album).

The set—which is a re-issue by Victor—includes "Traume. (Dreams), No. 5 of "Gedichte" Song Cycle; "Im Treibhaus" (In the Greenhouse), No. 3 of "Gedichte" Song Cycle, and "Schmerzen" (Affliction), No. 4 of "Gedichte" Song Cycle.

Stokowski and the Philadelphia Symphony provide a background which lends a special beauty to Miss Traubel's performance.

One of the most interesting single releases of recent months is a performance of the Boston Pops orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conductor.

It is called "Song Fest" (12-inch Victor Red Seal disc), and includes excerpts from a string of provocative old titles; namely, "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag," "Smiles," "Till We Meet Again," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "My Wild Irish Rose," "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," "Sweet Adeline," Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet," "There Is a Tavern in the Town," "Stein Song," and Let Me Call You Sweetheart."

Calling up a thousand gay and wistful memories, here is a record that belongs in every collection.

SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN

AUG 1 - 1943

Globe Aug 2

MUSIC
SANDERS THEATRE
Symphony Chamber Orchestra

For sheer enjoyment it would be difficult to surpass the program of music for chamber orchestra combinations which the Boston Symphony put on at Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon. In music both old and new, the sympathetic listener could study contrasts, experience beauty of several sorts and generally enjoy himself.

The first half of the program was taken up with old music performed by the members of the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments (Paul Fedorovsky, descant viol; Albert Bernard, treble viol; Alfred Zighera, viola da gamba, and director of the Society; Gaston Dufresne, violone; Putnam Aldrich, harpsichord).

Symmetrical beauty and calmness of outlook are the striking characteristics today in the old pieces of Couperin, Purcell, Gibbons and Handel which the society performed. And they were executed with suavity and old-world charm, much in contrast to the performance of the nervous music of today.

Leonard Bernstein, young Boston conductor, took over the second half of the program offering the dry, cackling "Dumbarton Oaks" Concerto for Chamber Orchestra of Stravinsky, the first Boston performance of Paul Bowles' incidental music for "The Wind Remains" and finally Brahms' Serenade No. 2 for Small Orchestra, Op. 16.

Paul Bowles' "The Wind Remains" is called a musical play, is based on a work of Federico Garcia Lorca, the late Spanish Loyalist poet. The Suite which Mr. Bowles has assembled is composed of seven short pieces, each suggesting an episode in the play. Some of it is imaginative music—"Love Music", for instance. On the other hand, some of the pieces are fitful and obscure musically.

Under Mr. Bernstein, the solo players and other members of the Boston Symphony played these three pieces with a good deal of spirit. Although the music occasionally got out of hand, things generally went very well indeed. The program will be repeated tonight at New England Mutual Hall.—J. W. R.

MUSIC AFIELD

By DR. D. E. JONES

Every city has some kind of Summer concert series offering a mixed repertory of music old and news from which the frankly lighter veins of composition are not excluded. Boston's particular version is its famous Pop Concerts.

The setup seems normal enough, although no other American city has ever been able to reproduce it. What you get is all the pleasures of a Continental cafe, plus a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are no outdoor noises; the air-conditioning is mild. Smoking is permitted, drinks also, and the service is silent and satisfactory. The Symphony Hall, capacity about 3,500, is packed with music lovers of all ages. The lower floor is littered with small tables with seats for four.

Young girls pass among the tables, taking your order for a sandwich or a drink or smoke. My night there was beastly hot, and there was an unflagging demand for cooling drinks. There was no objection to your cigar; plenty of corks popping, as light wines cheered one party. Bottled beer was a favorite.

The two galleries were crowded; there were no tables there, but at intermission two enormous bar rooms were thrown open and hundreds rushed therein. As intermission lasted a full half hour there was sufficient time to slake your thirst.

How about the music? Eighty-five members of the Boston Symphony (not the full complement) were led by Arthur Fiedler. There was a Slavonic Dance by Dvorak; a Toccata by Frescobaldi; the Finale of Mendelssohn's Concerto played by the combined first violin section; Strauss' Overture to Die Fledermaus; Victor Herbert Favorites and "Salute to our Fighting Forces" in which was heard Montezuma, Army Air Corps, Anchor's Aweigh, the Caissons and "God Bless America."

To these were added Handel's Concerto for organ and orchestra, the organ played by E. Power Biggs, and Von Weber's "Concertstuche" played by the very accomplished pianist, Lee Litwin.

Hundreds of servicemen, Army and Navy, stood during their selections; the applause was tremendous and half a dozen encores were given.

You just haven't lived if you've never been to the Pops. Going out, you enter a drab world.

A series of supplementary concerts began July 24. These are held on the Charles River embankment, where twenty to fifty thousand people may hear them. You pay 10 cents for a camp chair and you may place it where you wish, either close to the great shell where the orchestra is seated, or nearly half a mile away. There is no other charge. The setting is a delightful one. On the opposite bank of the river is the Longfellow Bridge, where the poet wrote his famous lines:

"I stood on the bridge at midnight
When the clock was striking the hour."

The music is always an admixture of the classical, standard and popular; just now the patriotic predominates.

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Conn
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Miss
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 2 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A re leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

... viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

Boston, Aug 2 (... Boston Symphony Orchestra M... is are presenting a sort of ...mme... night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts — spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern eletcric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

...ociety for Ancient In... ...ay a half dozen ... the distant past on ... of that time—the ... treble viol, viola ... violone and harpsi... ...refied music, some ...

VERY REV. DR. JOHN F... FENLON, in Holland, Mich., 69, ... president of St. Mary's Seminary ... of the Sulpician Society and ... the best known Catholic ... in this country and ... was born in Chicago.

MARCY SULLIVAN, ... 75, actor and ... played in the ... of "When ... Home." ... in Chicago.

DEATHS LAST NIGHT

By The Associated Press

Beverly Hills, Cal., and ... "bombs splattered all over the ... place."

In the enemy's futile effort to ... turn aside the U. S. bombers, victories were credited to Sergt. Bernard Schultz, Spartanburg, S. C., with a Focke-Wulf 190, and Sergt. A. M. Clem, New Britain, Conn., and Sergt. Gino Pizea, Lynn, Mass., with 109s.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain, Conn.
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other ... and is ... again ... rform... Bowles' ... Wind ... k born ... glas... ...ng a ... in in ... erally ... clever ... a re... ... them ... appro... ... elec... ... skele... ...nding ... 2 to 1, to chalk up the ... tory in their last 27 ... baseman Nick Ett... accounted for both ... ...cking out ... d two ... 1 a ... k for ... st ... ly ... by ... boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg, Miss.
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 5 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

...ument without sounding boards, ...t equipped with two control ...obs for color and volume. A ...e leads from the violin to a ...dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ...ry from the low of a G-string ... of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used ... Concert

... pencil, held firmly in the righ... hand. The bottle—clean and fille...

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer nlight's fantasy during the third progams of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin on the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles's suite from his opera, "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs ofr color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loud-speaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to b advantage during the am "clown's dance."

For contrast, members o ton Society for Ancient play a half dozen pi distant past on in time—the desc viola da gam chard. Th it datin powd of viola de gamba, violone and harpsi chord.

ciety for Ancient In- play a half dozen of the distant past on ts of that time—the viol, treble viol, viola and harpsi- music, some 1551, suggests and stately courts, with es of more ton instrument boards, but equipped control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast, members of the

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born ...ses this brittle, glas- During a

2 to 1 to chalk up the tory in their last 27 baseman Nick Ett accounted for both socke two three in the seven-game ender a streak for Tommy Bridges circuit clout in the winning lowed a base on balls to Bud Me- that feat of holding the league leaders to four hits. Spud Chandler won his 13th game against three defeats in gaining the nod over White. The Tigers had the tying run at third when Don Ross popped out. The White Sox stayed in second place, 8½ games behind, by sweeping both ends of their twin bill from the Athletics, 5 to 1 and 15 to 9. In stretching their winning streak to four, the Sox outsocked the A's in both games be-

OWEN ATTACKS COO

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 1943

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 2 -

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCIN TI

Unique Concerts

Uses Strange Instruments in Summer Series.

BOSTON -(AP)- Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederis Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

ciety for Ancient In-play a half dozen
of the distant past on ts of that time—the viol, treble viol, viola and harpsimusic, some 1551, suggests and stately courts, with nes of more

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Winds Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born this brittle, glasing a in ally ver reem pro-eleckeleding two volvio-charlow of an Eto best amusing

"clown".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Miss
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
- 1943

ument without sounding boards,
t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A re leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics
ry from the low of a G-string
the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig
hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

OWEN ATTACKS COO

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maestro Bows In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2. — (AP) — Boston symphony orchestra musicians presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts —spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extrordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

In "Servants' Dance"

The 32-year-old, New York-born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servants' dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

Old Instruments Used

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da camba, violone, and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky, and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the young musicians who ... Berkshire mu... Boston ...

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

... viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald

AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glas... the bottle during a ... again in ...

... Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen ... of the distant past on ... of that time—the ... viol, treble viol, viola ... violone and harpsichord ... music, some ... 1551, suggests ... and stately ... courts, with ... of more ... fragile

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Sun
Herald

AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

AUG 3 - 1943

...ument without sounding boards, ... equipped with two control ... knobs for color and volume. A ... wire leads from the violin to a ... loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics ... vary from the low of a G-string ... the high of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used Concert

... pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled ...

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

FOR VICTORY BUY WAR SAVINGS
Room 815, 8th Floor, Ambrose Chapin Building
136 East Michigan, Phone ...
HOUSEHOLD FINANCE CORPORATION
FIND HERE THE CASH LOAN YOU ...
Choose your monthly payments
$ 25 50 75 100 125 150 200 300
3 payments: $ 8.85 17.69 26.54 35.38 44.18 52.98 70.53 105.62
4 payments: $ 6.73 13.46 20.30 26.93 33.63 40.31 53.66 80.29
6 payments: $ 9.24 13.86 18.48 23.08 27.66 36.78 55.00
9 payments: $ 6.43 9.65 12.81 16.06 19.23 25.56 38.16
Payments shown in the table below include principal and interest. Charges $50 loan for $3.84
have many plans to fit our services to your needs.
tell us how much you prefer. We which payment plan you require and furniture loan or salary, car or come to apply for a salary, $300. Just Any man or woman with a job is wel-no wage or salary assignment taken.
installments. No endorsers required.
you need. Repay in small monthly at Household Finance for the money
Want to pay off old debts? Apply
Borrow on your own signature
IF YOU CAN PAY BACK ...
YOU CAN GET A $10 ...

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 2 -

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glas- ... of the bottle during a ... and again in ... generally

... Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 3 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 5 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS 1943 ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the righ hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[By the Associated Press]

Boston, Aug. 2 — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning almost 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply with a lead pencil now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

Heard In Two Sections

The 32-year-old New York-born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires sixteen men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument with a loudspeaker, but without sounding boards. It is equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G string to the high of an E flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

Some Date To 1551

For contrast, members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the ...

YOU CAN GET A ... ADROBE ON THE D-A-SUIT
IF YOU CAN PA...
Borrow on your own ...
NEED some extra cash ... Want to pay off old debts ... at Household Finance for ... you need. Repay in small ... installments. No endorsers ... no wage or salary assignments ... Any man or woman with ... come to apply for a ... furniture loan of $20 ... tell us how much you ... which payment plan ... have many plans to ... your needs.
$50 loans ... Payments shown include principal ...
FIND HERE

OWEN ATTA...

... Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

... 2 to 1, to chalk up the ... tory in their last 27 ... baseman Nick Etten ... accounted for both ... three ... in the ... seven-game winning streak for ... Tommy Bridges. His ... circuit clout in the nightcap followed a base on balls to Bud Metheny and nullified Hal White's feat of holding the league leaders to four hits.

Spud Chandler won his 13th game against three defeats in gaining the nod over White. The Tigers had the tying run at third when Don Ross popped out.

The White Sox stayed in second place, 8½ games behind, by sweeping both ends of a doubleheader from the Athletics, 5 to 1 and 15 to 9. In stretching their winning streak to four, the Sox ... socked the A's in both ...

Australian military experts are considering the use of dogs for tracking snipers.

We had come ... We caught some of them while ... shoes off. They had been sleeping ... "One German we captured told us that fighting on Bloody Ridge was three times worse than Stalingrad. I guess they never met any Russians there who averaged one Nazi for every bullet."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Sunday Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

Presented At Boston

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—(AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back doorstep variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand.

The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera, "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a "G" string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast, members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half-dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising, either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Winds Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet

...ciety for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen ... of the distant past on ...ts of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

...Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

...the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising, either—for composer Bowles ...

...ument without sounding boards, ...t equipped with two control ...obs for color and volume. A ...e leads from the violin to a ...dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ...ry from the low of a G-string ...the high of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

OWEN ATTA...

Horse Could Use Snood

Paris, Mo., Aug. 2 (AP)—Blame that two-day shut-down of Clarence Peter's threshing machine on a horse. Its tail caught between a belt and a pulley. All the belts and shafts were broken. The tail will do no further dam...

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald

AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Herald

AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

AUG 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

By TOM CHASE

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP). ~~Boston Symphony Orchestra~~ musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera, "The Wind Remains."

Bright Creation.

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

Wagon Lacking.

The Bowles Suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony Orchestra's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising —for composer Bowlthor of a

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The ~~Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

ociety for Ancient In-play a half dozen
of the distant past on ts of that time—the viol, treble viol, viola violone and harpsi-
music, some 551, suggests and stately courts, with es of more fragile

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glas-ne of the bottle during a ce" and again in generally

tory in their last 27 baseman Nick Ett accounted for ing out both socke two three ender a streak for circuit clout in the lowed a base on balls to theny and nullified Hal feat of holding the league to four hits, Spud Chandler game against three gaining the nod over Tigers had the tying run at when Don Ross popped out.
The White Sox stayed out second place, 8½ games behind bill from the ends of their sweeping both games in sec-15 to 9. In the Athletics, 5 to 1 ning streak to four, the socked the A's in both seven-game

Tommy Bridges. winning His leaders

OWEN ATTA

Boston
struments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rar-efied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

Last Week of America's Dancing Music!
BILL McCUNE
and His Fine Orchestra
This Is a Wonderful Band

Lee Mason
Sweet Sing-
1.50 C.

Room 815, 6th Fl.
136 East Michigan Ave.
FOR VICTORY other own.

Light Briar.
10.00

Kaywoodie.
12.50

10.00

HOUSE FIND HERE THE CASH
Choose your more Payments shown in the include principal and intere $50 loan for $3.
your needs.

NEED some Want to pay or at Household Finance Repay in sm
No endorse
No wage or salary assignm any man or woman with a come to apply for a sala furniture loan of $20 to tell us how much you which payment plan you have many plans to fit our Horse Cou

Use Snood

Paris, Mo., Aug. that two-day shut-Peter's thresh horse.
Its tail

Chungking, Aug. 2 year-old American ed dent of the Chinese last night after a Generalissimo Chi was immediately re Kouminteng Centra
the nation's highest as Acting President.
At Lin Sen's bed died were Vice Prem ter of Finance H. H. of War Gen. Ho Y other notables. He May 12.

President Sun
Lin Sen became 1932 when Chiang vote all his time to army for the war w
Despite the relati importance of the age, his dignity and China and its probl by those of the yo had made him a figure.

All Traffic
The President's state until 5 P. M. placed ceremonially that hour a three will be observed th
all traffic will halt salute will be fired Nation-wide mou creed and all place will be closed for morial ceremonies
Saturday throughou

ument without sounding boards,
t equipped with two control
obs for color and volume. A re leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics
ry from the low of a G-string
the high of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig
hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

SEATTLE, WASH.
NEWS-LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maier Home In Symphony

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
Sun (Aug. 2).—Musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-doorstep variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Indeed, why not, it appears—why not Horthy—or Kallay? And if Kallay—why not Boris of Bulgaria? And whoever said that Goering was not "nice" Nazi—and so on, ad nauseam.

Society ... play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 6 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
Vicksburg Miss. Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

AUG 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

1943 ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics y from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

SEATTLE, WASH.
NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

Night So

Cold water boils
In pools where the mo
They were lower this losses of rains; that sufficient ing unless sharp curone another almost as nets used to do in Fran Settlements in Frenc that Cana-the Federal as German , livestock
d. In Eu-ought have Blue shadows turn
Slowly in the spume c
And white meadows b
The things that fly, an
On paths where the b
And colder vapor coils
In pools where the mo
Seeking sleep.

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain, Conn.
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
Maier Feature In Symphony
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Fredericc Bowles' suite from his opera, "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York-born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg, Miss.
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ument without sounding boards,
t equipped with two control
obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics
ry from the low of a G-string
the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used
Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Baron Box Score

FIRST GAME

BIRMINGHAM—	Ab.	R.	H.	O.	A.
Usher, lf	4	1	2	1	1
Thaxton, cf	3	0	0	2	0
Siper, rf	4	0	0	1	6
Goldstein, 1b	4	0	0	0	2
Polly, 3b	4	0	0	1	5
Aleno, ss	2	2	1	6	2
Beeler, 2b	2	0	2	2	0
Smith, c	3	0	0	0	1
Baker, p	0	0	0	0	0
Stone, p
Totals	29	3	6	24	14

MONTGOMERY—	Ab.	R.	H.	O.	A.
Olson, 2b	5	1	3	1	4
Smith, cf	4	1	3	4	0
Veazey, lf	5	0	1	1	0
Roberts, ss	4	0	0	2	3
Aderholt, 3b	4	0	2	2	0
Montesagudo, rf	4	2	4	9	0
Walsh, 1b	3	1	1	5	1
Lane, c	3	0	1	0	1
Miller, p	3	1	1	0	1
Totals	35	6	15	27	9

Birmingham	000	011	100						—3
Montgomery	001	100	04x						—6

Slowly in the spume c
And white meadows b
the Federal as German fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles's suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain, Conn.
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg, Miss.
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
AUG 5 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG - 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG - 1943

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943
BALTIMORE, MD.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Milk Bottle In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Every Afternoon Except Sunday
Published at Monroe, historic Michigan Gateway and port on Lake Erie. The Monroe Publishing Company J. S. Gray, President and Editor C. K. Wesley, Business Manager
Offices 20-22 West First Street Monroe, Michigan
Telephones, News and Editorial, 300, 301, 302, Advertising and Subscription, 870, 871.
Entered at the Post Office at Monroe as second class mail matter.
MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Associated Press is exclusively entitled to the use for republication of all news dispatches credited to it or not otherwise credited in this paper and also the local news published therein. All right for publication of special dispatches and local news items herein are also reserved.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION
By carrier in Monroe or in any town where the News maintains a carrier service, 24 cents a week: $12.48 per year.
By mail in Monroe County where carrier service is not maintained $5.00 per year: $3.00 for six months: $1.75 for three months: 75c for one month.

Milk Bottle

The lowly milk bottle is the latest addition to the ever increasing number of odd instruments making debuts with symphony orchestras.

Now word comes from the Boston Symphony musicians that they will present a Fantastic kind of symphonic entertainment for their third program of an unusual series of concerts—covering almost 400 years and calling for the employment of such unique instruments as the descant viol, the electric violin and the milk bottle.

Paul Frederic Bowles, composer, uses such a bottle in the first concert performance of a suite from his opera The Wind Remains. A clean bottle is filled with water and a lead pencil plays an important part in the operation of this uncommon instrument. The sounds brought forth heighten the effect in the scoring for a Servants' Dance. The process is repeated in the finale.

The conductor will be Leonard Bernstein, an alumnus of the school of the Berkshire Foundation of which Serge Koussevitzky is founder and director.

Of course, a milk bottle is an uncommon instrument among the symphonists, but one remembers when an aeroplane propeller, a player piano and a typewriter rent the atmosphere of Carnegie Hall at a "modern concert" six or seven years ago.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 3 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Miss.
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

DAIRIES
42nd St. & 6th Ave., N. Y. C.
Telephone Wisconsin 7-0472
Women: 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. except Sun.
Men: 10 p.m. to 10 a.m. and all day Sun.
MILKS A MILLION, SUE, I HEAR KIRKMAN FLAKES HELP KEEP YOU GET SOFT AND SMOOTH, AND FLAKES THAN FROM 44% MORE OTHER LEADING LUXURY BRANDS.

Milk

The lowly milk bottle is the latest addition to the ever increasing number of odd instruments making debuts with symphony orchestras.

Now word comes from the Boston Symphony musicians that they will present a Fantastic kind of symphonic entertainment for their third program of an unusual series of concerts—covering almost 400 years and calling for the employment of such unique instruments as the descant viol, the electric violin and the milk bottle.

Paul Frederic Bowles, composer, uses such a bottle in the first concert performance of a suite from his opera The Wind Remains. A clean bottle is filled with water and a lead pencil plays an important part in the operation of this uncommon instrument. The sounds brought forth heighten the effect in the scoring for a Servants' Dance. The process is repeated in the finale.

The conductor will be Leonard Bernstein, an alumnus of the school of the Berkshire Foundation of which Serge Koussevitzky is founder and director.

Of course, a milk bottle is an uncommon instrument among the symphonists, but one remembers when an aeroplane propeller, a player piano and a typewriter rent the atmosphere of Carnegie Hall at a "modern concert" six or seven years ago.

* * *

...for ...ie...
...alf dozen pi...
...past ...ing
...de gamba, vio...
...d.

Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

...N. Y.
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain, Conn.
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 2 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Miss.
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 1943

...ument without sounding boards, ...t equipped with two control ...obs for color and volume. A ...e leads from the violin to a ...dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ...ry from the low of a G-string ...the high of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used ... Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig... hand. The bottle—clean and fille...

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Symphony Orches Gives Third Concer
Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

Maiden From
In Symphony

Aug. 2.—(AP)—Bost
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola ... de gamb ... lone and harpsichord.

This Clipping From Vicksburg Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky, and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Brighten your stay-at-home holiday with games! We've colorful croquet sets with screw-in handles and hard rock maple balls, complete with stands.

Other Sets for 6 or 8 Players 5.98, 7.98

BROWN THOMSON'S SPORTING GOODS DOWNSTAIRS STORE

Croquet Lunch Cloths for 8 Players 9.98

(Misprint)

FOR

STRANGE CONCERT

By TOM CHASE.

Boston, Aug. 2.—(AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra modern electric violin and the common or back door step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederick Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32 year old New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servants' dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

Tho Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky, and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS 1943 ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet il Used

Concert

pencil, held firmly in the righ hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle,
Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

NEWARK, N. J.
LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

Concert Staged by Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston, Aug. 3-(AP)—Boston symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle-clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

Interprets "Servants Dance"

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristices vary from the low of A G-string to the high E-flat clarinet and are heard to the best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time-the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively, goings-on.

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Sun
Herald

AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AUG 2 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A ce leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maestro Joins In Symphony

BOS... Aug. 2 — (AP) — Bost... sympl...
presen...
nigh...
gram...
—sp...
and...
trord...
desc...
tric...
door...
Pr...
debu...
ble.
held...
bott...
stan...
mer...
aga...
for...

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola ... de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

By TOM ...
Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[96]

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Herald

AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maestro Comes In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola, [illegible] viol, de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

Brighten your stay-at-home holiday with games! We've colorful croquet sets with screw-in handles and hard rock maple balls, complete with stands.

Croquet for 8 players 9.98

Other Sets for 6 or 8 Players 5.98, 7.98

BROWN THOMSON'S SPORTING GOODS DOWNSTAIRS STORE

[illegible] Lunch Cloths (Misprints) 1.29 if perfect —

certs — spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instrumetns as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle — clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suit from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time — the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violene and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

[illegible] and the lovey Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising, either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[illegible] viol, [illegible] da [illegible]
[illegible] harpsichord. The ra-
[illegible]sic, some of it dating
[illegible], suggests the powdered
[illegible] stately manners of anci-
[illegible]s, with occasional over[illegible] more lively, goings-on.

[illegible] music [illegible] who [illegible] the Berkshire Music
[illegible]er the Boston Sympho-
[illegible] famous [illegible]nductor, Serge
[illegible]evitzky.
[illegible]ut the o[illegible] thing lacking is [illegible]k wagon [illegible]ly wouldn't hng is [illegible] too [illegible]on. Thig either—have [illegible] surprisin[illegible] also autho—for [illegible]mposer Bowles [illegible] Eats Ha[illegible]uthor
[illegible] a work called "H[illegible] Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Sun
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

AUG 3 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
AUG 3 - 1943

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A ce leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

[illegible]il Used [illegible] Concert

pencil, held firmly in the righ hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

RE... A.
NEWS-LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maestro Heard In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

... viol, ... de gamba, violone and harpsichord. The ... music, some of it dating ..., suggests the powdered ... stately manners of ancient ..., with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

LINE,

SUNDAY, AUGUST 2, 194

according to conscience, above

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Unique Concert Series

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts — spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle — clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32 year old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during the 'servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da bamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising, either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

... the Berkshire Music ... the Boston Symphony ... famous conductor, Serge ... evitzky. ... About the only thing lacking is ... milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for ... Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Sun
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

... ument without sounding boards, ... t equipped with two control ... obs for color and volume. A ... ce leads from the violin to a ... dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ... ry from the low of a G-string ... the high of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used ... Concert

... pencil, held firmly in the righ ... hand. The bottle—clean and fille ...

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

RI... A.
NEBRASKA LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

HAMAN—ZIEGLER

The marriage of Miss Mildred Louise Ziegler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Ziegler of 132 Whiting street, and Gerhard Walter Haman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Haman of Kensington road, Kensington, took place Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church. Rev. O. V. Werner, pastor, performed the ceremony.

Miss Madeline Ziegler, twin sister of the bride, attended as maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Adele Haman and Miss Irene Haman, sisters of the brother of the bridegroom, served as best man, and ushers were Henry Welzke and Robert Ziegler, brother of the bride.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown fashioned with a lace bodice and net skirt, and a fingertip length veil.

A reception followed at the German-American Council rooms and the couple left for a wedding trip to New York city. Upon their return they will live on Henry street. The bridegroom is employed by the G. E. Prentice Co. of Kensington. The bride was guest of honor at showers given by Miss Madeline Ziegler and Miss Eleanor Feezoff.

Boston, Aug. 2—(AP) — Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of mid-summer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 40 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door- step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera, "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Electric Violin Also Included In Score

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Miss
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

...ument without sounding boards, ...t equipped with two control ...obs for color and volume. A ...e leads from the violin to a ...dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ...y from the low of a G-string ...high of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used ... Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig... hand. The bottle—clean and fille...

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

Finest Quality . . Lowest Price
Complete Single Vision Glasses
$10
CREDIT EXTENDED
Choice of modern styles including examination by Dr. John Freney.
ROOM 213 BROWN BLDG.
RIGH

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON (AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary nistruments as an ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding board, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

* * *

been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Miss.
Herald

AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AUG 2 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

umment without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A ce leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the righ hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Milk Bottle In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

AUG 2 - 1943

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

MEMBER FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Boston Symphony

Ancient and Ultra Modern Viols Played in New Concert Series

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy in a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Mr. Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles Suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for Small Orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitsky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Sun
Herald

AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE

AUG - 1943

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

- 1943

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics ry from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the righ hand. The bottle—clean and fille

Use Milk Bottle, Special Concert

Boston Symphony Musicians Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil And Electric Violin For Odd Concert

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bwoles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite — generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score — a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefield music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

NEWARK, N. J.
LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maestro Found In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the

GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain, Conn.
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Winds Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

[96]

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 1 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg, Miss.
Herald
AUG 3 - 1943

SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 5 - 1943

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

This Clipping From
TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1943

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
AUG 1943

ument without sounding boards, t equipped with two control obs for color and volume. A e leads from the violin to a dspeaker. Tonal characteristics y from the low of a G-string the high of an E-flat clarinet

...il Used Concert

pencil, held firmly in the rig hand. The bottle—clean and fille

...mony ... Use Milk Bottle, Lead Pencil During Special Concert

By TOM CHASE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert pe... mance of Paul Frederic Bow... suite from his opera "The W... mains."

The 32-year-old New Yo... composer uses the brittle, ... tones of the bottle during a ... vant's Dance" and again ... finale of the suite—gener... bright and rhythmically ... creation. The orchestration quires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

...y this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right

Bowles' also includes an electric milk wagon. This wouldn't have en too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

...d Crowd Jams Lanic City Fifth Straight Week End

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 2 — For the fifth consecutive week end, this seashore resort set a new record in crowds, with 190,000 week end vacationists jamming the boardwalk and beach yesterday. Beach Superintendent Richard Hughes said an estimated 138,000 persons were in the surf during the day. Transportation facilities were jammed and hotels and rooming houses displayed "no vacancy" signs early Saturday.

"PAPER DOLL" By The Mills Brothers. Record Hit At KELLER'S MUSIC HOUSE. Adv.

...ment Plan Is Announced By U. S. Corporation To Be Re-Sold

The task of re-selling to private owners 10,000 or more dwelling which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has ... in the next three months is to be one of orderly sales, "The Agency has no problem regulating forced sales and it does not wish to disturb the normal functioning of the real estate market." This assurance was given by Charles F. Cotter, general

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

RI[illegible] A.
NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Mag[illegible] In Symphony

BO[illegible] Aug. [illegible] (AP) - Bost[illegible]
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, M[illegible]
NEWS
AUG 2 - 19[illegible]

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From Vicksburg Miss.
Herald

Made to The Warren Tribune Chronicle, its newspaper boys, and subscribers for their patriotic support of the War Savings Program.

Treasury Salute

(Please Turn to Page 7)

Milk Bottle Is 'Played'

Makes Its Debut as Musical Instrument in Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2—AP—Boston symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra modern electric violin and the common or back door step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32 year old composer uses this brittle, glassy tones of the bottle with a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G string to the high of an E flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

Bowles also includes an electric small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 3 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain, Conn.
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

Maid Leads In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—(AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Winds Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

(Continued From Page One)

chaplain and rector of St. Martin's Protestant Episcopal church, the largest church in Harlem; Commissioner of Police Patrick Walsh; Myles A. Paige, Negro Justice of the Court of Special Sessions, and several Negro civic leaders.

Liquor Stores Closed

380 Jailed as Police and Negroes Battle in Harlem

...ll Used

In Strange Concert

By Tom Chase—Boston, Aug. 3—(AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones in the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Includes Violin in Score

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violine and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms' second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

...d Crowd Jams Lantic City Fifth Straight Week End

ANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 2 — For the fifth consecutive week end, this seashore resort set a new record in crowds, with 190,000 week end vacationists jamming the boardwalk and beach yesterday. Beach Superintendent Richard Hughes said an estimated 138,000 persons were in the surf during the day. Transportation facilities were jammed and hotels and rooming houses displayed "no vacancy" signs early Saturday.

"PAPER DOLL" By The Mills Brothers. Record Hit At KELLER'S MUSIC HOUSE. Adv.

To Be Re-Sold

Plan Is Announced By U. S. Corporation

The task of re-selling to private owners 10,000 or more dwellings which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has ...

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

NEWARK, N. J.
LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Major Hom
In Symphony

BOS... Aug. 2 (AP) - Bost...
GAZETTE

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola, de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. Ths wouldn't have been too surprisng either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

[96]

Milk Container Makes Debut With Boston Symphony Musicians.

BOSTON-(AP)-Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during a unique series of concerts — spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultramodern electric violin and the common or back-doorstep variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussian instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old New York-born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments.

Bowles includes also an electric violin in the score—a skeleton inand harpischord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahm's Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

ument without sounding board, ... equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-stri... to the high of an E-flat ... and are hea... best during the "amusin... Dance."

For contrast, mem... Boston Society for A... ments play half a do... of the distant past o... of that time—the de... treble viol, viola da gamba, lone and harpsichord. The rarefie... music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings on.

...yer Glad ...nd Him

...was under constant fear that some-one from back home would recognize me on the street. My conscience was clear because it was a case of my life or Gus' life. Yes, I am glad they found me because now I can tell my story to a jury."

Played in Cafes

Kappas arrived in Clearwater early last night with Sheriff Todd Tucker after a long and tedious trip by automobile from the Pacific coast. He was apprehended in Los Angeles three weeks ago on the old murder indictment and had been playing his zither in Greek cafes in Los Angeles ever since he fled from Tarpon Springs on the fateful Easter Sunday morning in 1932.

Kappas believes his arrest was the result of a visit to Los Angeles

(Continued on Page 2, Column 8)

...d Crowd Jams ...lantic City Fifth ...Straight Week End

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 2 — For the fifth consecutive week end, this seashore resort set a new record in crowds, with 190,000 week end vacationists jamming the boardwalk and beach yesterday. Beach Superintendent Richard Hughes said an estimated 138,000 persons were in the surf during the day. Transportation facilities were jammed and hotels and rooming houses displayed "no vacancy" signs early Saturday.

"PAPER DOLL" By The Mills Brothers. Record Hit At KELLER'S MUSIC HOUSE. Adv.

...For Fatter Pay

Washington, Aug. 3—(AP)—John L. Lewis told the War Labor board (WLB) today that American miners "are the only mine workers in any civilized country who do not receive compensation for travel time at each end of the shift."

Without a trace of belligerency before the board he long defied and ignored, Lewis appeared in behalf of a proposed supplemental wage agreement with the Illinois coal operators which would increase miners' earnings a minimum of $2.75 a day, including $1.25 for travel time.

Lewis left presentation of the miners' case-in-chief to special counsel—Crampton Harris, Birmingham lawyer who represented C. I. O. Iron Ore Workers in portal-to-portal suits upheld by a circuit court of appeals. Lewis did not enter the discussion until board members began asking questions.

The immediate issue was board approval or disapproval for a contract between the U. M. W. and the Illinois Coal Operators association, but the U. M. W. is seeking to make this a "model" contract for the Appalachian and other coal

(Continued on Page 2, Column 7)

...7,874 compared ... $28,537.00 during ju... ...first seven months ...s have totaled $36 ...mpared to receipts ...uring the same peri... ...a gain of $71,614.66 or ...233 per cent. These figures indicate an all-time record year is in prospect for the post office.

...To Be Re-Sold ...Plan Is Announced By ...U. S. Corporation

The task of re-selling to private owners 10,000 or more dwelling which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has set up in the past ... in the next three months is to be one of orderly sales. "The Agency has no problem requiring forced sales and it does not wish to disturb the normal functioning of the real estate market." This assurance was given by Charles F. Cotter, general

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Made Home In Symphony

Aug. 2 — (AP) — Bost

GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

Boston, Aug. 2—(AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instuments as the ancient Descant viol, the ulta modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are to be heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the Desant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahm's Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

...ut sounding boards, with two control ... and volume. A ... the violin to a ... characteristics ... of a G-stri... E-flat ... est ...

...nd Him was under constant fear that some one from back home would recognize me on the street. My conscience was clear because it was a case of my life or Gus' life. Yes, I am glad they found me because now I can tell my story to a jury.

Played in Cafes

Kappas arrived in Clearwater early last night with Sheriff Tucker after a long and tedious trip by automobile from the Pacific coast. He was apprehended in Los Angeles three weeks ago on the old murder indictment and had been playing his zither in Greek cafes in Los Angeles ever since he fled from Tarpon Springs on the fateful Easter Sunday morning in 1932.

Kappas believes his arrest was the result of a visit to Los Angeles

(Continued on Page 2, Column 8)

The immediate ... approval or disapproval for a contract between the U. M. W. and the Illinois Coal Operators association, but the U. M. W. is seeking to make this a "model" contract for the Appalachian and other coa

(Continued on Page 2, Column 1)

...d Crowd Jams Lantic City Fifth Straight Week End

ANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 2 — For the fifth consecutive week end, this seashore resort set a new record in crowds, with 190,000 week end vacationists jamming the boardwalk and beach yesterday. Beach Superintendent Richard Hughes said an estimated 138,000 persons were in the surf during the day. Transportation facilities were jammed and hotels and rooming houses displayed "no vacancy" signs early Saturday.

"PAPER DOLL" By The Mills Brothers. Record Hit At KELLER'S MUSIC HOUSE. Adv.

To Be Re-Sold

Plan Is Announced By U. S. Corporation

The task of re-selling to private owners 10,000 or more dwellings which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has acquired in four months is to be in the next three months is to be one of orderly sales. "The Agency has no problem requiring forced sales and it does not wish to disturb the normal functioning of the real estate market." This assurance was given by Charles F. Cotter, general

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maestro Comes In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 1 (AP) - Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola, de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Winds Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune
AUG 8 - 1943

AUG 2 - 1943
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST
AUG 2 - 1943

DANVILLE, VA.
BEE
AUG 3 - 1943

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Electric Violin

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarified music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a frigile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the [96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER

AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Maestro Boom In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony

GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald

AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1943

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1943

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
~~TIMES~~
Tribune

AUG 2 - 1943

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1943

CHARLESTON, S. C.
POST

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Winds Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

Symphony Uses Odd Instrument

By TOM CHASE

BOSTON— (AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servants's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

Bowles is also author of a work "Horse Eats Hat."

TRAVELERS CHEQUES

days—Business Travelers—War
s—Visitors to camps—Inductees
el in crowded trains and jammed
risk of lost or stolen travel funds.
ise precaution to change your ss Travelers Cheques. They are . But unlike cash, if lost or stolen, ll.
f $10, $20, $50 and $100. Cost cost 40¢ for $10 to $50. For sale
many Railroad Stations.

NEURALGIA
es upset by Nerves ruffled and upset by minor pains are also gently soothed by thepaquick-acting "BC" ingredients.
Keep a 10c or 25c package handy.
Use only as ... ed. Consult a physician wh... s persist.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Makes Debut In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

Uses Strange Instruments in Summer Series.

BOSTON -(AP)- Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederis Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

July Casualties Same as June

(By The Associated Press)

Bearing out Winston Churchill's recent assertion that "German hopes of U-boat warfare turning the tide of war are sinking as fast as the U-boats themselves," reported Western Atlantic ship sinkings last month totalled only six—the same as reported for June.

This reported toll contrasted with the record of Allied and neutral merchant ship losses in the first year of the war when Axis submarines were credited with sinking an average of 10 merchantmen a week.

Announcement by the Navy last

See SUBS SINK page 4

Reds Take 100 Villages

Tighten Pincers In Orel Sector

MOSCOW — (AP) — Red army troops, continuing the slow, relentless investment of the German defenses around Orel, yesterday hurled the Nazis out of 100 villages and tightened the pincers [illegible]

TRAVELERS CHEQUES
days—Business Travelers—War
s—Visitors to camps—Inductees
el in crowded trains and jammed
e risk of lost or stolen travel funds.
vise precaution to change your ss Travelers Cheques. They are
. But unlike cash, if lost or stolen, il.
($10, $20, $50 and $100. Cost cost 40¢ for $10 to $50. For sale
many Railroad Stations.

and NEURALGIA
es upset by Nerves frayed and upset by minor pains are also gently soothed by this quick-acting "BC" ingredients.
Keep a 10c or 25c package handy.
Use only as [illegible]ed. Consult a physician wh[illegible] persists.

Played in Cafes

Kappas arrived in Clear[illegible] early last night with Sheriff [illegible]
Tucker after a long and tedious [illegible] by automobile from the P[illegible] coast. He was apprehended in [illegible]
Angeles three weeks ago on th[illegible] murder indictment and had [illegible] playing his zither in Greek [illegible] in Los Angeles ever since he [illegible] from Tarpon Springs on the ta[illegible]
Easter Sunday morning in 193[illegible]
Kappas believes his arrest [illegible] the result of a visit to Los Ang[illegible]

(Continued on Page 2, Column [illegible]

[96]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

In Symphony

GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Winds Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat".

Milk Bottle In Symphony Debut

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

In Instruments

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—(AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle — clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederick Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

Clever Creation

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

Use Ancient Instrument

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen piece out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

YOU CAN GET A $10 IF YOU CAN PAY BACK

Borrow on your own signature

NEED some extra cash quickly? Want to pay off old debts? Apply at Household Finance for the money you need. Repay in small monthly installments. No endorsers required, no wage or salary assignment taken. Any man or woman with a job is welcome to apply for a salary, car or furniture loan of $20 to $300. Just tell us how much you require and which payment plan you prefer. We have many plans to fit our service to your needs.

$50 loan for $3.84

Payments shown in the table below include principal and interest. Charges

FIND HERE THE CASH LOAN YOU

Choose your monthly payment

	3 payments	4 payments	6 payments	9 payments
$ 25	$ 8.85	$ 6.73	$ 9.24	$ 6.43
50	17.69	13.46	13.86	9.65
75	26.54	20.20	18.48	12.87
100	35.38	26.93	23.08	16.06
125	44.18	33.63	27.66	19.23
150	52.98	40.31	36.78	25.56
200	70.53	53.66	55.00	38.16
300	105.62	80.29

HOUSEHOLD FINANCE CORPORATION

TRAVELERS CHEQUES

days—Business Travelers—War
s—Visitors to camps—Inductees
el in crowded trains and jammed
risk of lost or stolen travel funds.
vise precaution to change your ss Travelers Cheques. They are
. But unlike cash, if lost or stolen,
IL.
$10, $20, $50 and $100. Cost cost 40¢ for $10 to $50. For sale
many Railroad Stations.

and NEURALGIA

es upset by

Nerves ruffled and upset by minor pains are also gently soothed by the quick-acting "BC" ingredients.
Use only as ... ed. Consult a physician wh... s persist.

Played in Cafes

Kappas arrived in Clearw early last night with Sheriff T Tucker after a long and tedious by automobile from the Pa coast. He was apprehended in Angeles three weeks ago on the murder indictment and had b playing his zither in Greek c in Los Angeles ever since he from Tarpon Springs on the fa
Easter Sunday morning in 193
Kappas believes his arrest the result of a visit to Los Ange

(Continued on Page 2, Column 8

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola, de gamba, violone and harpsichord.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones or more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[96]

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—(AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer nights' fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle — clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederick Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

Clever Creation

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

Use Ancient Instrument

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen piece out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

TRAVELERS CHEQUES

days—Business Travelers—War's—Visitors to camps—Inductees el in crowded trains and jammed risk of lost or stolen travel funds. vise precaution to change your ss Travelers Cheques. They are . But unlike cash, if lost or stolen, ll.
f $10, $20, $50 and $100. Cost cost 40¢ for $10 to $50. For sale many Railroad Stations.

NEURALGIA

es upset by

Nerves rumbled and upset by minor pains are also gently soothed by the quick-acting "BC" ingredients. Keep a 10c or 25c package handy. Use only as directed. Consult a physician wh s persist.

Continued on Page 2, Column

KELLER'S MUSIC

Played in Cafes

Kappas arrived in Clear early last night with Sheriff Tucker after a long and tedious by automobile from the P coast. He was apprehended in Angeles three weeks ago on th murder indictment and had playing his zither in Greek in Los Angeles ever since he from Tarpon Springs on the Ea Easter Sunday morning in 19 Kappas believes his arrest the result of a visit to Los Ang

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

NEWS-LEADER
AUG 2 - 1943

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

Milk Bottle In Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of an unique series of concerts — spanning nearly four hundred years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The New York-born composer, 32, uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them played wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile "Concerto" by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms "Second Serenade" for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Symphony Orchestra Gives Third Concert Of Series In Boston

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1943

Milk Bottle Makes Orchestral Debut

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has imported a new percussion instrument for its first concert performance of Paul Bowles' Suite from his opera "The Wind Remains,"—the milk bottle. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle, filled with water, and treated as a full musical equal, stands beside the other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again.

The milk bottle is said to emit brittle glassy tones and is used during a "Servant's Dance," and again in the finale of the suite.

viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
New Britain, Conn.
Herald
AUG 2 - 1943

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

MONROE, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 3 - 1943

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 2 - 1943

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Boston Symphony Presents Unique Series of Concerts

By TOM CHASE

Boston — (AP) — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of Midsummer Night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains".

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses this brittle, glassy tone of the bottle during a "servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance".

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[96]

Musicians Give Unique Concert

By TOM CHASE
Associated Press Staff Writer

BOSTON, Aug. 5.—Boston symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts — spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered figs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles Suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either —for [illegible] Bowles is also author of a [illegible] "Horse Eats Hat."

TRAVELERS CHEQUES
days—Business Travelers—War
s—Visitors to camps—Inductees
el in crowded trains and jammed
risk of lost or stolen travel funds.
vise precaution to change your ss Travelers Cheques. They are
. But unlike cash, if lost or stolen, ll.
$10, $20, $50 and $100. Cost cost 40¢ for $10 to $50. For sale
many Railroad Stations.

NEURALGIA
and Nerves ruffled and upset by minor pains are also gently soothed by the quick-acting "BC" ingredients. pa-
Keep a 10c or 25c package handy. er-
Use only as [illegible]ed. Consult a physician wh[illegible] persist.

(Continued on Page 2, Column

KELLER'S MUSIC HO[illegible]

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
AUG 7 - 1943

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 2 - 1943

PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
AUG 4 - 1943

This Clipping From
TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH
AUG 2 - 1943

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
AUG 2 - 1943

Baton Rouge, La.
State Times
Aug. 3, 1943

Milk Bottle, Played With Pencil, Joins Boston Symphonic Group

By Tom Chase

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk-bottle.

Presemubly this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert. performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leeds from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half-dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da Gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowls suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky, and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Bosfon Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too sunrprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston Post Aug 2

Concert Led By Bernstein And Zighera

Old and new combined in the third program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's chamber series given Sunday afternoon. Sanders Theater in Cambridge, by reason of its affiliation with Harvard University, seemed even more appropriate than usual as the place in which both the respect for older centuries of art and the desire to find the art of tomorrow should manifest themselves.

The first part of the program was in charge of Alfred Zighera, director of the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments. The Society was assisted by Putman Aldrich at the harpsichord. The program included "La Sultane" by Couperin, "Fantasia upon one note" by Purcell, Fantasia by Orlando Gibbons, Sonata in C major by Handel, and Dances edited by Tilman Susato.

To approach this music in a superior manner or to dismiss it as untutored or quaint would be to miss the high degree of intellectuality displayed in the contrapuntal lines of Couperin, Purcell, and Gibbons, and the harmonic ingenuity of Purcell's "Fantasia upon one note."

The acme of performance came in Handel's Sonata in C major for viola da gamba and harpsichord, which in its apt shading and masterly co-ordination testified to two expert performers.

It was fortunate for Leonard Bernstein's reputation as a conductor that he concluded the second half of the program (which was under his direction) with the solid and trustworthy Brahms Serenade No. 2 for small orchestra, Op. 16. For the Concerto in E flat for Chamber Orchestra ("Dumbarton Oaks") by Stravinsky, difficult to play and conduct, lacked that confidence and freedom of execution necessary to a responsive interpretation, while the Suite from "The Wind Remains," by Paul Bowles, was of such trifling musical worth that both conductor and composer were in danger of being dismissed with a hearty laugh. Much was forgiven, however, by Mr. Bernstein's fiery and assured leadership in the Brahms. Nor could the Serenade have had a better chance for impressing one with its symphonic sweep and harmonic fullness, after the spasmodic effect of the Bowles Suite.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 10 1943

Themes and Variations

By Henry Simon

Pan Mail

A highly articulate and vituperative letter from a correspondent who signs himself Homo Veridicus regrets (only "regrets" is too weak a word) that I should find the appointment of Alfred Wallenstein as conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic a good thing. In fact, any little thing I have to say in favor of more opportunities for American-born conductors is a subject for his fine scorn. He consigns me, together with Deems Taylor, "to the deepest hell." I should enjoy that company, along with Virgil Thomson and others who have written on behalf of Americans.

Yet Mr. Veridicus makes some points worth answering. (I only wish there were space to print the whole letter and to answer it a seriatim.) He says, for instance, that "Messrs. Rodzinski, Reiner, Ormandy, Koussevitzky, Mitropoulos, Leinsdorf, i. e., the most outstanding persons in the field, are all American citizens."

Carry a Torch

Not only that, but some of them are among the most self-sacrificingly patriotic citizens I know personally. In carrying the torch for American-born conductors, I impugn neither the foreign-born men's citizenship nor their musicianship. I am not, as my correspondent suggests, trying to build up racial and national barriers. These men, along with so many others, have enriched our national life enormously. They have been welcomed here joyously on all sides and will continue to be.

Yet the fact remains that each of these men—and the others at the head of our major musical organizations—brings here a foreign tradition based on a foreign training, and that anything like an American tradition will never be developed before more American-born and trained conductors have the opportunity to conduct.

Mr. Veridicus believes that this is a good thing—that the European tradition is so much better than ours (and presumably any that we might develop) that we should be glad not to have Americans at the head of our orchestras. "They are better," he writes, "because we Europeans consider music as art, not as entertainment."

There is where he and I part company—in the assumption that good art cannot be good entertainment and vice versa. Hearing Toscanini conduct Verdi's Requiem was one of the most profoundly moving experiences I have ever had. I would not insult it by denying that it was also good entertainment.

Having Wonderful Time

There, too, may lie the difference between an American and a European tradition, which is so difficult to define. Americans are not ashamed of having a good time. Neither, for that matter, are most civilized Europeans. But to make a sharp distinction between "Now I am being stirred and inspired" and "Now I am enjoying myself"—that is not American.

Meantime, most of our finest conductors are European born, and there are few Americans who can compete with them. (Mr. V. thinks there aren't any.) And the reason is that the Americans have not had the opportunity to develop. I still wish they had it.

Centuries,
Instruments
ny Orchestra musicians are
's Debut With mphony Ensemble

Makes Debut
Symphony Group
HASE Gives Series usical Programs

ric Fiddle
Symphony
y Orchestra musicians are ght's fantasy during the third rts, spanning nearly 400 years

tra Punches,
e Instruments
Bowles also includes an electric ians Employ n Odd Concert

RTIST OTTLE

BOSTON TRAVELER, MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 194

Milk Bottle Makes Debut As Boston Symphony Piece

By TOM CHASE

(AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

MILK BOTTLE'S DEBUT

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York-born composer uses the brittle, classy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

MILK WAGON LACKING

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, trebel viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarified music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats hat."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

Milk bottle makes concert debut with Boston symphony

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP).—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of mil kbottle.

Presumably this ithe milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite fro m his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York-born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 15 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[97]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
AUG 7 - 1943

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD
AUG 3 - 1943

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 2 - 1943

PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

Baton Rouge, La.
State Times
Aug. 3, 1943

Milk Bottle, Played With Pencil, Joins Boston Symphonic Group

By Tom Chase

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk-bottle.

Presemubly this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leeds from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half-dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da Gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowls suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky, and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Bosfon Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too sunrprising either — for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 10 1943

Themes and Variations

By Henry Simon

Pan Mail

A highly articulate and vituperative letter from a correspondent who signs himself Homo Veridicus regrets (only "regrets" is too weak a word) that I should find the appointment of Alfred Wallenstein as conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic a good thing. In fact, any little thing I have to say in favor of more opportunities for American-born conductors is a subject for his fine scorn. He consigns me, together with Deems Taylor, "to the deepest hell." I should enjoy that company, along with Virgil Thomson and others who have written on behalf of Americans.

Yet Mr. Veridicus makes some points worth answering. (I only wish there were space to print the whole letter and to answer it a seriatim.) He says, for instance, that "Messrs. Rodzinski, Reiner, Ormandy, Koussevitzky, Mitropoulos, Leinsdorf, i. e., the most outstanding persons in the field, are all American citizens."

Carry a Torch

Not only that, but some of them are among the most self-sacrificingly patriotic citizens I know personally. In carrying the torch for American-born conductors, I impugn neither the foreign-born men's citizenship nor their musicianship. I am not, as my correspondent suggests, trying to build up racial and national barriers. These men, along with so many others, have enriched our national life enormously. They have been welcomed here joyously on all sides and will continue to be.

Yet the fact remains that each of these men—and the others at the head of our major musical organizations—brings here a foreign tradition based on a foreign training, and that anything like an American tradition will never be developed before more American-born and trained conductors have the opportunity to conduct.

Mr. Veridicus believes that this is a good thing—that the European tradition is so much better than ours (and presumably any that we might develop) that we should be glad not to have Americans at the head of our orchestras. "They are better," he writes, "because we Europeans consider music as art, not as entertainment."

There is where he and I part company—in the assumption that good art cannot be good entertainment and vice versa. Hearing Toscanini conduct Verdi's Requiem was one of the most profoundly moving experiences I have ever had. I would not insult it by denying that it was also good entertainment.

Having Wonderful Time

There, too, may lie the difference between an American and a European tradition, which is so difficult to define. Americans are not ashamed of having a good time. Neither, for that matter, are most civilized Europeans. But to make a sharp distinction between "Now I am being stirred and inspired" and "Now I am enjoying myself"—that is not American.

Meantime, most of our finest conductors are European born, and there are few Americans who can compete with them. (Mr. V. thinks there aren't any.) And the reason is that the Americans have not had the opportunity to develop. I still wish they had it.

This Clipping From
HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN

Land Invasion Near, Italians Are Warned, Allies Say Bettcher

Navy H

Centuries,
Instruments
ny Orchestra musicians are

's Debut With mphony Ensemble

Makes Debut
Symphony Group

HASE
y Gives Series usical Programs

ric Fiddle
Symphony

Orchestra musicians are fantasy during the third panning nearly 400 years

Punches, ruments cludes an electric ploy ncert

194 during the amusing own's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston society for ancient instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distance past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone, and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms Second Serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Let freedom ring on Uncle Sam's cash register! Buy U. S. War Bonds and Stamps!

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats hat."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

Concert Led By Bernstein And Zighera

Old and new combined in the third program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's chamber series given Sunday afternoon. Sanders Theater in Cambridge, by reason of its affiliation with Harvard University, seemed even more appropriate than usual as the place in which both the respect for older centuries of art and the desire to find the art of tomorrow should manifest themselves.

The first part of the program was in charge of Alfred Zighera, director of the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments. The Society was assisted by Putman Aldrich at the harpsichord. The program included "La Sultane" by Couperin, "Fantasia upon one note" by Purcell, Fantasia by Orlando Gibbons, Sonata in C major by Handel, and Dances edited by Tilman Susato.

To approach this music in a superior manner or to dismiss it as untutored or quaint would be to miss the high degree of intellectuality displayed in the contrapuntal lines of Couperin, Purcell, and Gibbons, and the harmonic ingenuity of Purcell's "Fantasia upon one note."

The acme of performance came in Handel's Sonata in C major for viola da gamba and harpsichord, which in its apt shading and masterly co-ordination testified to two expert performers.

It was fortunate for Leonard Bernstein's reputation as a conductor that he concluded the second half of the program (which was under his direction) with the solid and trustworthy Brahms Serenade No. 2 for small orchestra, Op. 16. For the Concerto in E flat for Chamber Orchestra ("Dumbarton Oaks") by Stravinsky, difficult to play and conduct, lacked that confidence and freedom of execution necessary to a responsive interpretation, while the Suite from "The Wind Remains," by Paul Bowles, was of such trifling musical worth that both conductor and composer were in danger of being dismissed with a hearty laugh. Much was forgiven, however, by Mr. Bernstein's fiery and assured leadership in the Brahms. Nor could the Serenade have had a better chance for impressing one with its symphonic sweep and harmonic fullness, after the spasmodic effect of the Bowles Suite.

Milk bottle makes concert debut with Boston symphony

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP).—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of mil kbottle.

Presumably this ithe milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite fro m his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York-born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 15 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[97]

PASTE OVER

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
AUG 7 - 1943

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD
AUG 5 - 1943

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 2 - 1943

PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS
AUG 2 - 1943

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
HATTIESBURG, MISS.
AMERICAN
AUG 4 - 1943

This Clipping From
TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH
AUG 2 - 1943

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
AUG 2 - 1943

Centuries,
Instruments
ny Orchestra musicians are

's Debut With mphony Ensemble

Makes Debut
Symphony Group

HASE Gives Series sical Programs

ric Fiddle
Symphony

y Orchestra musicians are ght's fantasy during the third rts, spanning nearly 400 years extraordin

tra Punches,
e Instruments

Bowles also includes an electric

ians Employ n Odd Concert

RTIST OTTLE

BOSTON TRAVELER, MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 194

Milk Bottle Makes Debut As Boston Symphony Piece

By TOM CHASE

(AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

MILK BOTTLE'S DEBUT

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York-born composer uses the brittle, classy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

MILK WAGON LACKING

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, trebel viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarified music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music School under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats hat."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1943

Baton Rouge, La.
State Times
Aug. 3, 1943

Milk Bottle, Played With Pencil, Joins Boston Symphonic Group

By Tom Chase

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP) — Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk-bottle.

Presemubly this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "servant's dance and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leeds from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "clown's dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half-dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da Gamba, violone and harpsichord. The rarefied music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

The Bowls suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky, and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the proming young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Bosfon Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too sunrprising either—for Composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

Boston Post aug 2

Concert Led By Bernstein And Zighera

Old and new combined in the third program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's chamber series given Sunday afternoon. Sanders Theater in Cambridge, by reason of its affiliation with Harvard University, seemed even more appropriate than usual as the place in which both the respect for older centuries of art and the desire to find the art of tomorrow should manifest themselves.

The first part of the program was in charge of Alfred Zighera, director of the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments. The Society was assisted by Putman Aldrich at the harpsichord. The program included "La Sultane" by Couperin, "Fantasia upon one note" by Purcell, Fantasia by Orlando Gibbons, Sonata in C major by Handel, and Dances edited by Tilman Susato.

To approach this music in a superior manner or to dismiss it as untutored or quaint would be to miss the high degree of intellectuality displayed in the contrapuntal lines of Couperin, Purcell, and Gibbons, and the harmonic ingenuity of Purcell's "Fantasia upon one note."

The acme of performance came in Handel's Sonata in C major for viola da gamba and harpsichord, which in its apt shading and masterly co-ordination testified to two expert performers.

It was fortunate for Leonard Bernstein's reputation as a conductor that he concluded the second half of the program (which was under his direction) with the solid and trustworthy Brahms Serenade No. 2 for small orchestra, Op. 16. For the Concerto in E flat for Chamber Orchestra ("Dumbarton Oaks") by Stravinsky, difficult to play and conduct, lacked that confidence and freedom of execution necessary to a responsive interpretation, while the Suite from "The Wind Remains," by Paul Bowles, was of such trifling musical worth that both conductor and composer were in danger of being dismissed with a hearty laugh. Much was forgiven, however, by Mr. Bernstein's fiery and assured leadership in the Brahms. Nor could the Serenade have had a better chance for impressing one with its symphonic sweep and harmonic fullness, after the spasmodic effect of the Bowles Suite.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 10 1943

Themes and Variations

By Henry Simon

Pan Mail

A highly articulate and vituperative letter from a correspondent who signs himself Homo Veridicus regrets (only "regrets" is too weak a word) that I should find the appointment of Alfred Wallenstein as conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic a good thing. In fact, any little thing I have to say in favor of more opportunities for American-born conductors is a subject for his fine scorn. He consigns me, together with Deems Taylor, "to the deepest hell." I should enjoy that company, along with Virgil Thomson and others who have written on behalf of Americans.

Yet Mr. Veridicus makes some points worth answering. (I only wish there were space to print the whole letter and to answer it a seriatim.) He says, for instance, that "Messrs. Rodzinski, Reiner, Ormandy, Koussevitzky, Mitropoulos, Leinsdorf, i. e., the most outstanding persons in the field, are all American citizens."

Carry a Torch

Not only that, but some of them are among the most self-sacrificingly patriotic citizens I know personally. In carrying the torch for American-born conductors, I impugn neither the foreign-born men's citizenship nor their musicianship. I am not, as my correspondent suggests, trying to build up racial and national barriers. These men, along with so many others, have enriched our national life enormously. They have been welcomed here joyously on all sides and will continue to be.

Yet the fact remains that each of these men—and the others at the head of our major musical organizations—brings here a foreign tradition based on a foreign training, and that anything like an American tradition will never be developed before more American-born and trained conductors have the opportunity to conduct.

Mr. Veridicus believes that this is a good thing—that the European tradition is so much better than ours (and presumably any that we might develop) that we should be glad not to have Americans at the head of our orchestras. "They are better," he writes, "because we Europeans consider music as art, not as entertainment."

There is where he and I part company—in the assumption that good art cannot be good entertainment and vice versa. Hearing Toscanini conduct Verdi's Requiem was one of the most profoundly moving experiences I have ever had. I would not insult it by denying that it was also good entertainment.

Having Wonderful Time

There, too, may lie the difference between an American and a European tradition, which is so difficult to define. Americans are not ashamed of having a good time. Neither, for that matter, are most civilized Europeans. But to make a sharp distinction between "Now I am being stirred and inspired" and "Now I am enjoying myself"—that is not American.

Meantime, most of our finest conductors are European born, and there are few Americans who can compete with them. (Mr. V. thinks there aren't any.) And the reason is that the Americans have not had the opportunity to develop. I still wish they had it.

Milk bottle makes concert debut with Boston symphony

Boston, Aug. 2 (AP).—Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third programs of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of mil kbottle.

Presumably this ithe milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water—stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite fro m his opera "The Wind Remains."

The 32-year-old, New York-born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 15 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire Music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

[97]

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1943

11 Symphonies Join Plea to End Recording Ban

Wire Marshall Field Their Support of Philharmonic Protest to Petrillo Union

Eleven leading symphony orchestras have now telegraphed their approval of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society's stand against the union ban on recording of music by symphony orchestras, the society announced yesterday.

Marshall Field, president of the society, had urged the removal of the ban in a letter made public Sunday. The letter was addressed to James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, which imposed the ban. In his letter Mr. Field said, that the society requires the royalties from its recordings to insure the continuance of the orchestra.

Mr. Field made it clear in his letter, however, that he did not include popular bands in his plea for the lifting of the record ban. Mr. Petrillo has been out of town since Mr. Field's letter was published, and it has been impossible to reach him for a statement.

The telegrams approving Mr. Field's plea were received from the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Rochester Philharmonic, the Indianapolis Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, the Chicago Symphony, the Boston Symphony, the Cleveland Orchestra, the National Symphony of Washington, the Cincinnati Symphony, the San Francisco Symphony and the Minneapolis Symphony.

Meanwnile, a petition protesting the national union's plans to spend $500,000 to employ famous symphony orchestras for free concerts in small cities throughout the country was submitted yesterday afternoon at Mr. Petrillo's office, at 1450 Broadway, by a delegation from the Musicians Unity Club. The petition was signed by 800 members of the club, which is located at 124 West Fiftieth Street and is composed of members of Local 802 of the A. F. of M.

The petition objected to the concert plans on the grounds that at present they call for the subsidizing out of union funds of musicians who are already employed at high salaries.

The petition added: "We feel, however, that if the Federation is to subsidize music, new orchestra units should be formed, using those musicians who are not already employed at high wages. In the expenditure of funds to which all members contribute, money should be spent on those members who need it most."

The petition was presented by Nicholas F. Vitalo, recording secretary of the Unity Club, and was received by Harry Steeper, assistant to Mr. Petrillo.

CHICAGO, IL
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1943

Concert Series to Be Held in Historic Hall

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Present and former residents of Chicagoland figure largely in the midsummer, home-front war activities in the Berkshire hills. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of 1430 Lake Shore drive is Pittsfield chairman of a series of four weekly concerts starting Wednesday evening at Sedgwick hall, Lenox, by members of Boston Symphony orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is conductor. Expenses are to be paid by a group of summer residents, so that the entire receipts, which it is expected will be around $2,000, will go to the International Red Cross.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs is chairman of the Richmond committee for the series and Mrs. John L. Senior [Maud L. Cowham] heads the group at Lenox, of whom Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn, St. Paul, Minn., also is a member. The Seniors have named their Lenox farm which they bought last year, High Wick. Mrs. Senior personally superintends one of the largest war gardens in the Berkshire hills.

• • •

Sedgwick hall, Lenox, where the Koussevitzky concerts are to be held, was dedicated Oct. 3, 1889, at a ball given by Mr. and Mrs. William C. Whitney in compliment to Mrs. Frances Folsom Cleveland, wife of Grover Cleveland, 22d President of the United States. A contemporary writer said there were present three members of President Cleveland's first cabinet with their wives, "ambassadors, barons, counts, princes, lords and ladies of high degree." Present also was Mrs. William Douglas Sloane, the present Mrs. Henry White, who is now at Elm court, Lenox, for her 56th consecutive season. Mrs. White is the former Miss Emily T. Vanderbilt, daughter of William H. Vanderbilt and the granddaughter of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt.

At this ball, which the writer with unerring prophecy said would be "famous in the history of Lenox," Mrs. Cleveland wore "a magnificent silk gown relieved with gold embroidery and diamonds." Miss Leiter of Chicago and Washington wore white silk; Mrs. George Higginson, Chicago, gray and black tulle; Mrs. Sloane, white and silver tulle. Miss Leiter was in the receiving line with Mrs. Whitney and Mrs. Cleveland.

• • •

One day recently members of the Great Barrington summer colony, led by Mrs. William Felton Barrett [Margery Barker], had a war canning bee at the Congregational church parish house.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Herndon of New York are with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Glencoe at Tamarack, Tyringham. Mr. and Mrs. George Allen Holloway of New York are visiting her mother, Mrs. Brace W. Paddock, Pittsfield.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 12 1943

Koussevitzky Opens Lenox Series

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky spoke briefly before the opening program in the chamber music series was presented at Sedgwick Hall in Lenox last night by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. In the background is the Burgin String Quartet which gave the first concert.

First Concert Presented in Lenox Series

Critic Finds Little To Praise in Initial Program

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The first of a series of five concerts sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation was given last night in Sedgwick Hall in Lenox. The artists were the members of the Burgin string quartet, Richard Burgin and Alfred Kripps, violins, Eugene Lehner, viola and Jean Bedetti, 'cello. In a Brahms piano quartet the pianist was Leonard Bernstein. All the members of the quartet are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Except for the final movement, the E flat Haydn, Opus 33, No. 2, was done with a clear and warm tone, and an attitude of humble respect, one which allows the music to speak for itself, as Haydn can do so well. Except for the first violinist's indulgence in the luxury of a few surprising slides, this was honest Haydn, the kind that the large audience, which packed the hall, appreciated. When it came to the final movement, this was muffed. Any speed must be adjusted excessive which prevents the performers from articulating the proper stress in a metrical unit. This normally bouncing, volatile sort of Gilbert-and-Sullivan patter became a grim, earth-bound sprint.

The Debussy was done with relentless drive. The four musicians, individually so capable, combined without mutual understanding nor consideration. It seems one has a right to expect from musicians of that calibre discrimination of a higher order than was apparent. The failure to distinguish between a "forte" in a mood designated as "anime et tres decide" and one marked "doux et expressif" is not up to the standards accepted on any stage, let alone the Berkshires with their rich tradition of ensemble playing. We shall not speak of the distortion of phrases and idioms, of intonation, of actual errors. Things like that can happen to the best of 'em. But no allowance need be made for a lack of refinement, of poise, of simple penetration into the core of the music, for a lack of balance, of the most elementary artistic regard and deference.

Program Changed

It was unfortunate that it was not deemed necessary to announce a departure from the printed program. There is no harm or reason why a last minute change may not be made for the convenience or to suit the purpose of the artists, but it is unpardonable and discourteous, to proceed without advising one's audience of the fact. Why the A major Brahms piano quartet was played instead of the G minor listed on the program, we don't need to know, and yet, out of pure curiosity, we might like to hear, for we can't imagine that the G minor was less ready for public approval. In fact, by the time the Brahms was reached, one's ears had become so dulled by the insistent and continual forcing of the tone that Mr. Bernstein's contribution was the coup de grace. One would have thought that the only indications the musicians were heeding were "with" or "without" force.

In dusting off an Old Farmer's Almanac we found an apt lesson which might furnish the text: Bernstein et al played Brahms; Bernstein won. Not that the young gentleman is without pianistic ability or musical sense, but a more insensitive display as an ensemble player has rarely presented himself on local professional boards.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky welcomed all music lovers in an opening speech. He expressed deep regret it was not possible to hold the usual concerts and music school at Tanglewood.

"However," said he, "since we cannot have the Boston Symphony orchestra this year, I know you are contented to have members of the orchestra playing for you during this concert and others to be held here this month. It will also show you what I can do without the orchestra."

CAMBRIDGE CONCERT

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The greatly improved atmospheric conditions may have had something to do with it, but it seemed to this observer that the fifth programme of the Boston Symphony's new summer series, as heard at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon was the best to date, and each of the others has had much to recommend it. The conductor yesterday was G. Wallace Woodworth and in addition to the customary small orchestra, he had at his command the summer chorus of Harvard and Radcliffe. Together with Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, these student singers took part in a performance of Mozart's seldom heard cantata, "Regina Coeli."

An admirable work, admirably performed by all concerned, this cantata was not the only unfamiliar music of the afternoon. Indeed, it has been the chance to hear the unusual that has made these summer concerts so valuable. Mr. Woodworth's first semi-novelty was Bach's Prelude to the cantata, "Ich hatte viel Bekuemmernis," scored for oboe and strings. Here is Bach at his most treasurable and in the half churchly surroundings of the Harvard auditorium, this beautiful and moving music was heard to wonderful advantage.

The remaining novel item was Haydn's Symphony No. 80 in B minor, composed about 1783 or, roughly speaking, 10 years earlier than the 12 "London" Symphonies, by which Haydn is best known today. Yet here and there this earlier work seemed more striking than its celebrated successors. Few of Haydn's symphonies are written in the minor mode, and this of itself, lent a certain distinction to the fiery opening Allegro and to the Minuet. Minor minuets are rare enough, but the most arresting movement was the Finale with its baffling rhythm and its curious foreshadowings of all sorts of later tendencies. To Mr. Woodworth much thanks, not only for the pieec itself, but for the fine performance.

Between them Bach and Mozart furnished the rest of the programme. From the former came the Third Brandenburg Concerto and from the latter the Serenade known as "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." To each of them the smaller string orchestra proved singularly flattering. When 60 or 70 men get sawing away on the Third Brandenburg with its pounding rhythms, its intricate counterpoint, there is always a faint suggestion of the power house. At New England Mutual Hall this evening this delightful concert will come to a second hearing.

Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

MUSIC

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings — Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" — Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) — Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) — Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor — Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthful cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the

INFORMATION OBSCURED

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1943

11 Symphonies Join Plea to End Recording Ban

Wire Marshall Field Their Support of Philharmonic Protest to Petrillo Union

Eleven leading symphony orchestras have now telegraphed their approval of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society's stand against the union ban on recording of music by symphony orchestras, the society announced yesterday.

Marshall Field, president of the society, had urged the removal of the ban in a letter made public Sunday. The letter was addressed to James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, which imposed the ban. In his letter Mr. Field said, that the society requires the royalties from its recordings to insure the continuance of the orchestra.

Mr. Field made it clear in his letter, however, that he did not include popular bands in his plea for the lifting of the record ban. Mr. Petrillo has been out of town since Mr. Field's letter was published, and it has been impossible to reach him for a statement.

The telegrams approving Mr. Field's plea were received from the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Rochester Philharmonic, the Indianapolis Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, the Chicago Symphony, the Boston Symphony, the Cleveland Orchestra, the National Symphony of Washington, the Cincinnati Symphony, the San Francisco Symphony and the Minneapolis Symphony.

Meanwnile, a petition protesting the national union's plans to spend $500,000 to employ famous symphony orchestras for free concerts in small cities throughout the country was submitted yesterday afternoon at Mr. Petrillo's office, at 1450 Broadway, by a delegation from the Musicians Unity Club. The petition was signed by 800 members of the club, which is located at 124 West Fiftieth Street and is composed of members of Local 802 of the A. F. of M.

The petition objected to the concert plans on the grounds that at present they call for the subsidizing out of union funds of musicians who are already employed at high salaries.

The petition added: "We feel, however, that if the Federation is to subsidize music, new orchestra units should be formed, using those musicians who are not already employed at high wages. In the expenditure of funds to which all members contribute, money should be spent on those members who need it most."

The petition was presented by Nicholas F. Vitalo, recording secretary of the Unity Club, and was received by Harry Steeper, assistant to Mr. Petrillo.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1943

Concert Series to Be Held in Historic Hall

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Present and former residents of Chicagoland figure largely in the midsummer, home-front war activities in the Berkshire hills. Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of 1430 Lake Shore drive is Pittsfield chairman of a series of four weekly concerts starting Wednesday evening at Sedgwick hall, Lenox, by members of Boston Symphony orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is conductor. Expenses are to be paid by a group of summer residents, so that the entire receipts, which it is expected will be around $2,000, will go to the International Red Cross.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs is chairman of the Richmond committee for the series and Mrs. John L. Senior [Maud L. Cowham] heads the group at Lenox, of whom Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn, St. Paul, Minn. also is a member. The Seniors have named their Lenox farm which they bought last year, High Wick. Mrs. Senior personally superintends one of the largest war gardens in the Berkshire hills.

• • •

Sedgwick hall, Lenox, where the Koussevitzky concerts are to be held, was dedicated Oct. 3, 1889, at a ball given by Mr. and Mrs. William C. Whitney in compliment to Mrs. Frances Folsom Cleveland, wife of Grover Cleveland, 22d President of the United States. A contemporary writer said there were present three members of President Cleveland's first cabinet with their wives, "ambassadors, barons, counts, princes, lords and ladies of high degree." Present also was Mrs. William Douglas Sloane, the present Mrs. Henry White, who is now at Elm court, Lenox, for her 56th consecutive season. Mrs. White is the former Miss Emily T. Vanderbilt, daughter of William H. Vanderbilt and the granddaughter of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt.

At this ball, which the writer with unerring prophecy said would be "famous in the history of Lenox," Mrs. Cleveland wore a magnificent silk gown relieved with gold embroidery and diamonds. Miss Leiter of Chicago and Washington wore white silk; Mrs. Henry Higginson, Chicago, gray and white tulle; Mrs. Sloane, white and gold tulle. Miss Leiter was in the receiving line with Mrs. Whitney and Mrs. Cleveland.

• • •

One day recently members of the Great Barrington summer colony, led by Mrs. William Felton Bacon [Margery Barker], had a warning bee at the Congregational church parish house.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Herrick of New York are with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Glencoe at Tamarack, Tyringham. Mr. and Mrs. George Allen Holloway of New York are visiting her mother, Mrs. Brace W. Paddock, Pittsfield.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 12 1943

Koussevitzky Opens Lenox Series

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky spoke briefly before the opening program in the chamber music series was presented at Sedgwick Hall in Lenox last night by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. In the background is the Burgin String Quartet which gave the first concert.

First Concert Presented in Lenox Series

Critic Finds Little To Praise in Initial Program

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The first of a series of five concerts sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation was given last night in Sedgwick Hall in Lenox. The artists were the members of the Burgin string quartet, Richard Burgin and Alfred Kripps, violins, Eugene Lehner, viola and Jean Bedetti, 'cello. In a Brahms piano quartet the pianist was Leonard Bernstein. All the members of the quartet are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Except for the final movement, the E flat Haydn, Opus 33, No. 2, was done with a clear and warm tone, and an attitude of humble respect, one which allows the music to speak for itself, as Haydn can do so well. Except for the first violinist's indulgence in the luxury of a few surprising slides, this was honest Haydn, the kind that the large audience, which packed the hall, appreciated. When it came to the final movement, this was muffed. Any speed must be adopted excessive which prevents the performers from articulating the proper stress in a metrical unit. This normally bouncing, volatile sort of Gilbert-and-Sullivan patter became a grim, earth-bound sprint.

The Debussy was done with relentless drive. The four musicians, individually so capable, combined without mutual understanding nor consideration. It seems one has a right to expect from musicians of that calibre discrimination of a higher order than was apparent. The failure to distinguish between a "forte" in a mood designated as "anime et tres decide" and one marked "doux et expressif" is not up to the standards accepted on any stage, let alone the Berkshires with their rich tradition of ensemble playing. We shall not speak of the distortion of phrases and idioms, of intonation, of actual errors. Things like that can happen to the best of 'em. But no allowance need be made for a lack of refinement, of poise, of simple penetration into the core of the music, for a lack of balance, of the most elementary artistic regard and deference.

Program Changed

It was unfortunate that it was not deemed necessary to announce a departure from the printed program. There is no harm or reason why a last minute change may not be made for the convenience or to suit the purpose of the artists, but it is unpardonable and discourteous, to proceed without advising one's audience of the fact. Why the A major Brahms piano quartet was played instead of the G minor listed on the program, we don't need to know, and yet, out of pure curiosity, we might like to hear, for we can't imagine that the G minor was less ready for public approval. In fact, by the time the Brahms was reached, one's ears had become so dulled by the insistent and continual forcing of the tone that Mr. Bernstein's contribution was the coup de grace. One would have thought that the only indications the musicians were heeding were "with" or "without" force.

In dusting off an Old Farmer's Almanac we found an apt lesson which might furnish the text: Bernstein et al played Brahms; Bernstein won. Not that the young gentleman is without pianistic ability or musical sense, but a more insensitive display as an ensemble player has rarely presented himself on local professional boards.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky welcomed all music lovers in an opening speech. He expressed deep regret it was not possible to hold the usual concerts and music school at Tanglewood.

"However," said he, "since we cannot have the Boston Symphony orchestra this year, I know you are contented to have members of the orchestra playing for you during this concert and others to be held here this month. It will also show you what I can do without the orchestra."

Aug 15 Herald

MUSIC

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings — Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" — Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) — Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) — Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor — Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthful cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

CAMBRIDGE CONCERT

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The greatly improved atmospheric conditions may have had something to do with it, but it seemed to this observer that the fifth programme of the Boston Symphony's new summer series, as heard at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon was the best to date, and each of the others has had much to recommend it. The conductor yesterday was G. Wallace Woodworth and in addition to the customary small orchestra, he had at his command the summer chorus of Harvard and Radcliffe. Together with Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, these student singers took part in a performance of Mozart's seldom heard cantata, "Regina Coeli."

An admirable work, admirably performed by all concerned, this cantata was not the only unfamiliar music of the afternoon. Indeed, it has been the chance to hear the unusual that has made these summer concerts so valuable. Mr. Woodworth's first semi-novelty was Bach's Prelude to the cantata, "Ich hatte viel Bekuemmernis," scored for oboe and strings. Here is Bach at his most treasurable and in the half churchly surroundings of the Harvard auditorium, this beautiful and moving music was heard to wonderful advantage.

The remaining novel item was Haydn's Symphony No. 80 in B minor, composed about 1783 or, roughly speaking, 10 years earlier than the 12 "London" Symphonies, by which Haydn is best known today. Yet here and there this earlier work seemed more striking than its celebrated successors. Few of Haydn's symphonies are written in the minor mode, and this of itself, lent a certain distinction to the fiery opening Allegro and to the Minuet. Minor minuets are rare enough, but the most arresting movement was the Finale with its baffling rhythm and its curious foreshadowings of all sorts of later tendencies. To Mr. Woodworth much thanks, not only for the pieec itself, but for the fine performance.

Between them Bach and Mozart furnished the rest of the programme. From the former came the Third Brandenburg Concerto and from the latter the Serenade known as "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." To each of them the smaller string orchestra proved singularly flattering. When 60 or 70 men get sawing away on the Third Brandenburg with its pounding rhythms, its intricate counterpoint, there is always a faint suggestion of the power house. At New England Mutual Hall this evening this delightful concert will come to a second hearing.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
AUG 8 - 1943

15 Major Orchestras Perform Only 140 Native Works

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

THE National Music Council's annual report on the symphonic state of the nation reveals that 140 works by native composers were performed by the 15 major orchestras as against 978 by alien artists during the season 1942-43.

This shows a light gain for our own culture, though the proportion of time and effort devoted to native art still is pathetically small—only 11.3 per cent. One great and wealthy city seems to have decided that the time and money spent on art which stubbornly remains predominantly European might be more profitably devoted to native culture, and has abandoned its symphony orchestra.

This is Detroit, crowded, and badly in need of every possible educational and entertainment facility. Henry Ford, who used the Detroit Symphony for several years on broadcasts which his company sponsored, disliked symphony and was definitely anti-highbrow. Other wealthy citizens also withdrew their support, possibly for similar reasons.

The loss of the Detroit Symphony reduced, slightly, the total number of symphonic performances, but did not alter the ratio of native and alien art. The National Music Council's survey is incomplete in that it offers no break-down of the statistics submitted. Thus, any one-movement work by an American is counted as a performance and no comparison has been drawn between the time consumed by lengthy European symphonies and briefer native compositions.

60 Native Artists

THE 60 natives whose compositions found places on the programs of the Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Rochester, St. Louis, San Francisco and Washington orchestras, all have written full-length symphonies. Many of them have written several; but so feeble has been the propaganda for the native composer that it seems improbable that the average reader of this column will recognize all the names of the 60 native composers who have been represented on the regular subscription concerts of our 15 major orchestras.

Los Angeles stood first as promoter of our culture. It devoted 23.9 per cent of its programs to native art. Washington's National Symphony won tenth place on this roll of honor, with 8.8 per cent of its repertoire drawn from native art. We were trailed by Cleveland, Boston, Chicago, Kansas City and Minneapolis.

According to the tables released by the National Music Council, the artistic patriotism of the symphony orchestras as measured by the ratio of native to alien works is as follows:

Position	Orchestra	Percentage
1	Los Angeles	23.9
2	Indianapolis	18.4
3	San Francisco	18.2
4	Cincinnati	16.4
5	St. Louis	15.1
6	New York Philharmonic-Symphony	12.3
7	Rochester	11.3
8	Philadelphia	10.7
9	Pittsburgh	9.9
10	Washington (National Symphony)	8.8
11	Cleveland	8.5
12	Boston	8.1
13	Chicago	7.5
14	Kansas City	6.4
15	Minneapolis	4.5

Chicago List Off

SURPRISING is the low place earned by Chicago, where Theodore Thomas established, and Frederick Stock maintained for half a century, a tradition of aiding native art. Boston and Chicago formerly stood high in the list. But with orchestras, as with ball teams, only a year is needed to spoil a record.

Meanwhile, in normal times the major orchestras of France play generous amounts of French music. Those of Germany give grudging recognition to any alien music. Those of Russia make only tentative gestures toward the art of other lands. Those of England give adequate representation to British music. Italy is devoted to opera and hears almost no symphonic music and hardly any alien music.

In the Americas, Italy dominates opera whether it be heard in New York, Buenos Aires, Chicago, or Mexico. Germany and Russia dominate the symphony both north and south of the Rio Grande. It's a curious condition and there is much evidence that the public has grown weary of it.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 15 1943

MAESTROS OF YORE

Living Conductor Discusses Nature of Performances of Years Ago

By OLIN DOWNES

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, passing through the city gates last week, referred to the Petrillo ban on record making and to the associated problem of a revision of the copyright laws to deal with performers' royalties from records used for broadcasting purposes. But he soon digressed from this phase of the subject to an artistic consideration which is near his heart, namely, the effect that the advent of the records will have on all music history and upon the future of interpretation.

"Remember," he said, "that a wholly new epoch is introduced in the musical art by the invention of the record. Only from this moment, as a matter of fact, has the art a living history! Remember that we of today can merely speculate upon the character of performances of music antedating the period of the Renaissance. We do not even know with any precision how Bach and Handel sounded to their contemporaries. We are not even assured of the facts of the most recent aspects of music—the art of the modern conductor.

Art Evolves

"I have been witness to the changes which have occurred in this art, even within my own lifetime, and we all know the discussions of tempo that were rife, and the 'traditions'—founded on fact or fancy—of a former generation; take, for example, the alleged tempo of Wagner and the alleged tempo of Mendelssohn in the Allegretto of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony.

"Supposing our information on this subject to be correct, and not misconception of a tradition about a tradition, which means merely the gradual distortion of original facts repeated without reliable evidence of their accuracy in successive decades—suppose this, what shall we say of these tempi?

"You remember Wagner's repeated criticisms of Mendelssohn for his fast tempi. We cannot examine them today in the light of the immutable evidence that the record will furnish the future of the interpretations of the great musicians of this period. But it is generally agreed that Mendelssohn's tempo was faster in the Allegretto movement than that which is common today, while most conductors keep closely to the traditionally slower tempo of Wagner.

Wagner Tradition

"If we could only reproduce these two interpretations! We would have, in the first place, the priceless treasure of Beethoven's music as it filtered through the minds of two very great musicians of the generation that followed him. We also would be in a far better position to decide for ourselves, and come to a clearer and better oriented choice of the tempo for this music.

"And it is very possible that we would not precisely agree with either version. I know the common acceptance of the Wagner tradition in this movement. Everyone who knows the master's words on the subject, and has taken to heart the example that he, the first great modern conductor, set, when he sought the melodic essence of a movement—the 'melos'—as basis for his tempo, accepts the principle. But how shall we of today apply it?

"Was Mendelssohn wrong? Take the specified passage at the beat that history relates of his performance. The music has then a marvelous radiance and a mercurial wit—the same music which becomes a trifle heavier, if also more virile, in the Wagner conception. But we have only the accounts of these interpretations. We have not the truth of the performances.

"And there's the rub. We of today can never experience them. We certainly can never inform ourselves of the actual life and nuance, as he revealed it, of this music, nor can we sense the 'feel' of that music as it impressed Wagner's generation. All these things the record could give us.

Recollection of Nikisch

"And that question of the reaction of successive generations to music of their past is of the utmost importance. In fact we cannot know the musical art in its present significance and meaning until we have such a knowledge of its organic history.

"For interpretation, the language of music itself changes with localities and races and civilizations.

"I had the honor and privilege of studying the conductor's art with Arthur Nikisch, perhaps the greatest orchestral interpreter, let us say, after Wagner. Technically as well as poetically he was, to my mind, the leading conductorial genius of his day. And it was sheer genius. It was that indescribable and unmanufacturable quality that makes the interpreter whose intuition pierces to the very root of a musical masterpiece, and that inexplicably, by some flash of the will and the spirit that cannot be projected by merely technical means, makes every player of the orchestra a sovereign interpreter and participant in the creative effect of the performance.

Virtuoso Conductor

"Very well! But I would not swear that Nikisch's style today would be accepted as whole heartedly as it was in his lifetime. Why? Because I think we have become more classical.

"Perhaps you think it is only in our period that the so-called 'virtuoso conductor' takes liberties with tempi, constantly changing them, often changing them in ways not indicated, or even suggested, by the letter of the score?

"I assure you that this is not a contemporaneous invention. Quite the contrary. I think it was Wagner, with his genius for the musical truth, and his creative attitude toward all interpretation, who definitely launched the conception of highly individualized orchestral interpretation. His greatness, his perceptive passion for his art revolutionized the modern methods of orchestral conducting. But it also carried the insidious poison, if it is to be called that, the seductive perceptive of tempi and nuances altered at will, and a kind of interpretation sensitized and personalized to an intoxicating extent, possible only with the modern orchestra. This potency has been terribly abused.

"Nikisch was another Titan who had instinctive and imperious mastery of the baton, the soul of an evocative artist and romanticist, whom conservative critics flayed for his treatment of certain classical scores. Then it was that Weingartner made his reputation, basically upon the fact that he cultivated classic proportion and restraint, and proceeded without license. Some called him cold. He was lofty, a believer in ideal balance and beauty, and his influence did much to swing the conductors back to a more conservative standard. In this respect, too, the young Weingartner was in some sort a prophet of the neoclassicism which became first a principle and then a fad of modern music and interpretation as well.

Music Has Data

"The pendulum constantly swings with each age that passes, and we see in perspective certain periods of art, separated from each other by centuries, which correspond in their tendencies. Be sure the conductor's methods will modify with those of all other makers and performers of music.

"For the interpretation of a musical score can never rest, in the final analysis, upon mere historical data, or even mere correctness and precision in translating the symbols on the printed page into sound. A performance of that kind is precise, euphonious, yet artificial. It may be accurate as a reflection in a mirror. But that is not the soul of art. That is not the organic life, the 'élan vital' of music. Always, in our individual artistic progress and in the evolution of the thought and spirit of society, the art of musical composition and the parallel art of musical interpretation will change. But in the future we will have a degree of orientation and direction in our progress that we could not have in the long ages when musical performance vanished with the moment when it was given. From now on music has history, data, records."

MT. HOLLY N.J.
MIRROR
7-15-43

Check-Up Reveals Kind Of Music Soldiers Like

NEW YORK.—Here's a consensus of records which prominent artists, including Lawrence Tibbett, John Charles Thomas, Gladys Swarthout, Jeanette MacDonald, were asked for while making nation-wide tours of army and navy bases.

The selections (albums); (1) Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1, by the Philadelphia Orchestra; (2) Stephen Foster music, sung by Richard Crooks; (3) Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, by Sanroma and Boston "Pops" Orchestra; (4) Strauss Waltzes, by Boston "Pops" Orchestra; (5) Dance album by Artie Shaw's orchestra.

Single selections: (1) The Lord's Prayer, by Gladys Swarthout and by John Charles Thomas; (2) Intermezzo, played by Toscha Seidel; (3) Gounod's Ave Maria, by Jeanette MacDonald, Schubert's Ave Marie by Marian Anderson; (4) Donkey Serenade and Giannina Mia, by Allan Jones; (5) Andante Cantabile and Humoresque, by Fritz Kreisler.

Herald MUSIC Aug 16

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings — Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" — Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) — Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) — Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor — Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthful cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

Woodworth Conductor At Harvard

Aug 16 Monitor

Harvard itself took part in the concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra principals in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon, putting its Glee Club to work and asking along the Radcliffe Choral Society by way of making out a chorus for the Cantata of Mozart, "Regina Coeli" (K. 108). Further than that, the institution lent the services of G. Wallace Woodworth for the conducting of the whole program.

Strange, perhaps, but the Symphony men, notwithstanding their unrivalled ability as executants, performed with more zeal in association with the young men and young women of the university than by themselves. Accompanying a choir of American voices, they seemed like musicians of the present, speaking in living accents of now and here; whereas playing alone, they seemed rather to be back in their own student days, rehearsing the classics as for a conservatory prize,

* * *

Assisting as soloist in the "Regina Coeli" was Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, and her singing still more stimulated the highly skilled instrumentalists to a human rather than a merely professional and technical attitude to the occasion. Great music presented by artists of the first distinction is not so different, after all, from ordinary music done by just such persons as happen. It is not so much what is negotiated by those on the platform or stage as what is heard by someone — yourself perchance—in the audience.

Take a moment in the aria, "Ora pro nobis," if that episode does define itself as an aria; everything quiets down, the solo voice being subdued with the rest; and right there a note in the viola sounds out, a note in the low range where the viola can at once recall and prophesy a thousand things. There we have all it wants to make a memorable concert. Or possibly it was the tinkle of the harpsichord, more seen than heard, but plaintively and eloquently heard for an instant in the soloist's cadenza.

* * *

The concerts by the Symphony principals are indeed a rarity; nothing like them is ever got up in the winter season. Nevertheless, that old Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 for strings by Bach can be just as noisy a sawmill under the hands of the best fiddlers as under those of lesser ones. Why do not the Symphony front desks carry this job through as an ensemble? Here seems no place for them to call in a conductor to improvise on them.

Now Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" is another matter; and so the Symphony No. 80 in D minor of Haydn. It seems hard to credit that a composer could write 80 symphonies with anything less than a patriarch's span of years for a career. Yet little of this particular effort of Haydn's meets anything but routine requirements. The opening Allegro Spiritoso is a charm. The following movements are just form and pattern.

Another mention — Prelude to Bach's Cantata No. 21, for oboe and strings, Mr. Gillet playing the oboe, completes the record of the fifth concert's doings. W. P. T.

Picturesque Esplanade Concert Scene

Post August 16

Standing at attention after the playing of the national anthem at the Esplanade concert last night, 30,000 persons held lighted matches to present one of the loveliest pictures ever seen on the banks of the Charles River.

30,000 AT COLORFUL ESPLANADE CONCERT

Continued From First Page

The demonstration was arranged with the idea of winding up the 15th consecutive season of the concerts with something that the public would always remember for its color and beauty. It originally was planned to hold the demonstration Wednesday night, the final night of the concerts this year, but fearful that the weather might not be advantageous, it was decided to hold the demonstration last night.

Under ideal weather conditions the largest crowd of the season attended last night's concert under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Over 20,000 persons were seated within the oval, and another 10,000 persons fringed the outskirts.

Midway through the programme it was announced that the public would be asked to hold the lighted matches before their faces at the conclusion of the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

Like Hollywood Bowl

Just as the final strains of the anthem floated through the air the first matches were struck and tiny pinpoints of light began to appear throughout the huge crowd. Soon other matches were lighted, and then, as the crowd got into the mood, the darkness disappeared as thousands of matches cast their glow over the scene.

The demonstration was first tried at the Hollywood Bowl in California and it was so successful there that it was decided to try it here in Boston.

Last night it was pointed out that the past 15 years have seen the shell grow from its original wooden one, costing but $2000, to the present granite one that cost $270,000.

There are but three more concerts for this season, one tomorrow night, a children's concert Wednesday morning from 10 to 11 o'clock, and the final concert Wednesday night.

30,000 AT CONCERT ON RIVER BANK

Hatch Shell Crowd Joins in Dramatic Sunday Finale

In one of the most picturesque and colorful scenes ever to take place at an Esplanade concert, over 30,000 persons stood at attention after the playing of the national anthem last night and held lighted matches in front of their faces in a demonstration that marked the last Sunday night concert of the present season.

Globe MUSIC Aug 16

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concerts

G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Boston Symphony's fifth pair of concerts of music in the smaller forms, has gone back to the classic masters for his program. He has delved among the works of Bach, Haydn and Mozart and produced two which are fondly considered favorites, three which are quite unfamiliar.

The concerts begin—the first at Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon, the second at New England Mutual Hall this evening—with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto for Strings, played by the combination of instruments which Bach probably had in mind. According to that wise and practical musicologist Donald Tovey, 11 instruments—three each of violins, violas and cellos, plus bass and harpsichord—were about right. And that is the combination which Mr. Woodworth uses.

The effect is extraordinary. Rhythms, although more delicately adjusted, are more clearly followed. The harmonic mass has transparency in place of a lugubrious richness. Bach sounds the way one feels Bach ought to sound, although there is no real criterion for such a judgment.

From the brightness of the Brandenburg Concerto, Mr. Woodworth went to the solemn grandeur of the Prelude to Bach's Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis," and on to Mozart's effervescent "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" Serenade.

After the interval, Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang in good style and Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society assisted in the performance of Mozart's Cantata (K. 108) "Regina Coeli," a baffling work of genius, for its depth and beauty could never reveal that its author was only 15 at its composition. Mrs. Goldovsky sang in good style and with tonal warmth, although she was often overbalanced by the orchestra.

The program closed with a recently discovered Symphony of Haydn, No. 80 in D Minor. It is a witty little piece, actually a chamber symphony having many a good barrel organ tune.—(J. W. R.)

Boston Herald Aug 16

MATCH-LIT ESPLANADE AUDIENCE—Section of throng of 35,000 persons attending final Sunday concert of 15th Esplanade season last night. The photograph was taken five minutes before dimout hour, and the dots of white are lighted matches held by members of the audience to relieve the murk. The last concert will be Wednesday evening.

SHERMAN, TEXAS DEMOCRAT

AUG 15 1943

LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR—Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass.

Herald MUSIC Aug 16

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings — Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" — Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) — Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) — Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor — Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthful cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

Woodworth Conductor At Harvard

Aug 16 Monitor

Harvard itself took part in the concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra principals in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon, putting its Glee Club to work and asking along the Radcliffe Choral Society by way of making out a chorus for the Cantata of Mozart, "Regina Coeli" (K. 108). Further than that, the institution lent the services of G. Wallace Woodworth for the conducting of the whole program.

Strange, perhaps, but the Symphony men, notwithstanding their unrivalled ability as executants, performed with more zeal in association with the young men and young women of the university than by themselves. Accompanying a choir of American voices, they seemed like musicians of the present, speaking in living accents of now and here; whereas playing alone, they seemed rather to be back in their own student days, rehearsing the classics as for a conservatory prize,

* * *

Assisting as soloist in the "Regina Coeli" was Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, and her singing still more stimulated the highly skilled instrumentalists to a human rather than a merely professional and technical attitude to the occasion. Great music presented by artists of the first distinction is not so different, after all, from ordinary music done by just such persons as happen. It is not so much what is negotiated by those on the platform or stage as what is heard by someone — yourself perchance—in the audience.

Take a moment in the aria, "Ora pro nobis," if that episode does define itself as an aria; everything quiets down, the solo voice being subdued with the rest; and right there a note in the viola sounds out, a note in the low range where the viola can at once recall and prophesy a thousand things. There we have all it wants to make a memorable concert. Or possibly it was the tinkle of the harpsichord, more seen than heard, but plaintively and eloquently heard for an instant in the soloist's cadenza.

* * *

The concerts by the Symphony principals are indeed a rarity; nothing like them is ever got up in the winter season. Nevertheless, that old Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 for strings by Bach can be just as noisy a sawmill under the hands of the best fiddlers as under those of lesser ones. Why do not the Symphony front desks carry this job through as an ensemble? Here seems no place for them to call in a conductor to improvise on them.

Now Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" is another matter; and so the Symphony No: 80 in D minor of Haydn. It seems hard to credit that a composer could write 80 symphonies with anything less than a patriarch's span of years for a career. Yet little of this particular effort of Haydn's meets anything but routine requirements. The opening Allegro Spiritoso is a charm. The following movements are just form and pattern.

Another mention — Prelude to Bach's Cantata No. 21, for oboe and strings, Mr. Gillet playing the oboe, completes the record of the fifth concert's doings. W. P. T.

Picturesque Esplanade Concert Scene

Post August 16

Standing at attention after the playing of the national anthem at the Esplanade concert last night, 30,000 persons held lighted matches to present one of the loveliest pictures ever seen on the banks of the Charles River.

30,000 AT COLORFUL ESPLANADE CONCERT

Continued From First Page

The demonstration was arranged with the idea of winding up the 15th consecutive season of the concerts with something that the public would always remember for its color and beauty. It originally was planned to hold the demonstration Wednesday night, the final night of the concerts this year, but fearful that the weather might not be advantageous, it was decided to hold the demonstration last night.

Under ideal weather conditions the largest crowd of the season attended last night's concert under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Over 20,000 persons were seated within the oval, and another 10,000 persons fringed the outskirts.

Midway through the programme it was announced that the public would be asked to hold the lighted matches before their faces at the conclusion of the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

Like Hollywood Bowl

Just as the final strains of the anthem floated through the air the first matches were struck and tiny pinpoints of light began to appear throughout the huge crowd. Soon other matches were lighted, and then, as the crowd got into the mood, the darkness disappeared as thousands of matches cast their glow over the scene.

The demonstration was first tried at the Hollywood Bowl in California and it was so successful there that it was decided to try it here in Boston.

Last night it was pointed out that the past 15 years have seen the shell grow from its original wooden one, costing but $2000, to the present granite one that cost $270,000.

There are but three more concerts for this season, one tomorrow night, a children's concert Wednesday morning from 10 to 11 o'clock, and the final concert Wednesday night.

30,000 AT CONCERT ON RIVER BANK

Hatch Shell Crowd Joins in Dramatic Sunday Finale

In one of the most picturesque and colorful scenes ever to take place at an Esplanade concert, over 30,000 persons stood at attention after the playing of the national anthem last night and held lighted matches in front of their faces in a demonstration that marked the last Sunday night concert of the present season.

Globe MUSIC Aug 16

SANDERS THEATRE

Symphony Chamber Concerts

G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Boston Symphony's fifth pair of concerts of music in the smaller forms, has gone back to the classic masters for his program. He has delved among the works of Bach, Haydn and Mozart and produced two which are fondly considered favorites, three which are quite unfamiliar.

The concerts begin—the first at Sanders Theatre yesterday afternoon, the second at New England Mutual Hall this evening—with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto for Strings, played by the combination of instruments which Bach probably had in mind. According to that wise and practical musicologist Donald Tovey, 11 instruments—three each of violins, violas and cellos, plus bass and harpsichord—were about right. And that is the combination which Mr. Woodworth uses.

The effect is extraordinary. Rhythms, although more delicately adjusted, are more clearly followed. The harmonic mass has transparency in place of a lugubrious richness. Bach sounds the way one feels Bach ought to sound, although there is no real criterion for such a judgment.

From the brightness of the Brandenburg Concerto, Mr. Woodworth went to the solemn grandeur of the Prelude to Bach's Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis," and on to Mozart's effervescent "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" Serenade.

After the interval, Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang in good style and Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society assisted in the performance of Mozart's Cantata (K. 108) "Regina Coeli," a baffling work of genius, for its depth and beauty would never reveal that its author was only 15 at its composition. Mrs. Goldovsky sang in ood style and with tonal warmth, although she was often overbalanced by the orchestra.

The program closed with a recently discovered Symphony of Haydn, No. 80 in D Minor. It is a witty little piece, actually a chamber symphony having many a good barrel organ tune.—(J. W. R.)

Boston Herald Aug 16

HATCH-LIT ESPLANADE AUDIENCE—Section of throng of 35,000 persons attending final Sunday concert of 15th Esplanade season last night. The photograph was taken five minutes before dimout hour, and the dots of white are lighted matches held by members of the audience to relieve the murk. The last concert will be Wednesday evening.

SHERMAN, TEXAS DEMOCRAT

AUG 15 1943

LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR—Soviet ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Center near Lenox, Mass.

CAMBRIDGE CONCERT

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The greatly improved atmospheric conditions may have had something to do with it, but it seemed to this observer that the fifth programme of the Boston Symphony's new summer series as heard at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon was the best to date, and each of the others has had much to recommend it. The conductor yesterday was G. Wallace Woodworth and in addition to the customary small orchestra, he had at his command the summer chorus of Harvard and Radcliffe. Together with Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, these student singers took part in a performance of Mozart's seldom heard cantata, "Regina Coeli."

An admirable work, admirably performed by all concerned, this cantata was not the only unfamiliar music of the afternoon. Indeed, it has been the chance to hear the unusual that has made these summer concerts so valuable. Mr. Woodworth's first semi-novelty was Bach's Prelude to the cantata, "Ich hatte viel Bekuemmernis," scored for oboe and strings. Here is Bach at his most treasurable and in the half churchly surroundings of the Harvard auditorium, this beautiful and moving music was heard to wonderful advantage.

The remaining novel item was Haydn's Symphony No. 80 in B minor, composed about 1783 or, roughly speaking, 10 years earlier than the 12 "London" Symphonies by which Haydn is best known today. Yet here and there this earlier work seemed more striking than its celebrated successors. Few of Haydn's symphonies are written in the minor mode, and this of itself, lent a certain distinction to the fiery opening Allegro and to the Minuet. Minor minuets are rare enough, but the most arresting movement was the Finale with its baffling rhythm and its curious foreshadowings of all sorts of later tendencies. To Mr. Woodworth much thanks, not only for the pieec itself, but for the fine performance.

Between them Bach and Mozart furnished the rest of the programme. From the former came the Third Brandenburg Concerto and from the latter the Serenade known as "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." To each of them the smaller string orchestra proved singularly flattering. When 60 or 70 men get sawing away on the Third Brandenburg with its pounding rhythms, its intricate counterpoint, there is always a faint suggestion of the power house. At New England Mutual Hall this evening this delightful concert will come to

SUMMER CONCERT

Yesterday afternoon brought at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, the last but one of the summer concerts by "first desk" and other players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Edgar Curtis conducted. The programme one of the most rewarding in a generally interesting series, listed Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," the Piano Quintet of Shostakovitch, an unfamiliar Symphony in B-flat major, attributed to Haydn and the "Water Music" of Handel.

Originally published under Haydn's name in 1772 and bearing the opus number, 10, No. 2, this little symphony was later thought to be the work of brother Michael and was not included in the complete edition of Josef's works. Hans Gal, who effected its re-publication in London in 1939, believed that the internal evidence was sufficent to prove its authenticity and no less an authority than Sir Donald Tovey has backed him up. Whichever brother wrote the tiny symphony—it takes only 10 minutes to play—it is wholly charming and, although it would be one of his earlier works in the form, it does have its indubitable Haydnesque touches. It was exquisitely set forth yesterday.

The other orchestral numbers may be grouped as a pair of musical gifts, Wagner's to his wife and Handel's to his English sovereign, George the First.

An orchestra of 16 played the Idyll on the stairs at Tribschen on that Christmas morn in 1870. It may often be heard today from a symphony orchestra with full quota of strings. Yesterday some 20 players gave it a satisfying presentation, but one is well advised to forget the opera in these chamber performances. Sturdy Handel with British overtones served to bring the concert to an agreeable close. Here and elsewhere young Mr. Curtis conducted with the authority we have come to expect from him.

Between them, the Burgin String Quartet (Messrs. Burgin, Kripps, LaFranc and Bedetti) and Jesus Maria Sanroma did exceedingly well by Shostakovitch's Quintet. Like most of that the gifted Russian has given it is of uneven worth but its bright spots more than atone for those that are relatively ineffective. The programme will be repeated this evening at New England Mutual Hall.

PONTIAC, MICH. PRESS

JUL 19 1943

Musicians Will Appear as Soloists

Boston Symphony to Give Unique Series of Concerts

BOSTON, July 19.—(AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

Wartime Development

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

Presentation Beautiful

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-Major Piano Concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three areas tastefully and all of the men performed admirably in the many solo passages.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of fourteen concerts come to an end.

Aug 16

MUSIC

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings ..... Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" ..... Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) ..... Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor ..... Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthful cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

MUSIC

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings ..... Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" ..... Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) ..... Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor ..... Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthful cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

WORCESTER, MASS. GAZETTE

AUG 19 1943

Planes Guard Concert Crowds On Esplanade

BOSTON, Aug. 19 (UP) — Metropolitan District Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman has revealed that Esplanade Summer concert audiences have been protected by an umbrella of airplanes patroling the ocean for possible enemy action.

Hultman made the disclosure last night at the final concert in the series. He said that officials of the commission were in constant communication with the Army as a safeguard against enemy bombers.

The commissioner said that police had prepared for rapid evacuation of the crowd of music-lovers who lolled on the Charles River Embankment listening to music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From

New Britain Herald

AUG 19 1943

LAWRENCE, MASS. ~~EAGLE~~

Tribune

AUG 19 1943

Esplanade Concerts Guarded by Planes

Boston, Aug. 19 (UP) — Metropolitan District Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman has revealed that Esplanade summer concert audiences have been protected by an umbrella of airplanes patroling the ocean for possible enemy action.

Hultman made the disclosure last night at the final concert in the series. He said that officials of the commission were in constant communication with the army as a safeguard against enemy bombers.

The commissioner said that police had prepared for rapid evacuation of the crowd of music-lovers who lolled on the Charles river embankment listening to music played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Planes Protected Concert Audiences

BOSTON, Aug. 19 (UP)—Metropolitan District Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman has revealed that Esplanade summer concert audiences have been protected by an umbrella of airplanes patroling the ocean for possible enemy action.

Hultman made the disclosure last night at the final concert in the series. He said that officials of the commission were in constant communication with the Army as a safeguard against enemy bombers.

The commissioner said that police had prepared for rapid evacuation of the crowd of music-lovers who lolled on the Charles river embankment listening to music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. BULLETIN

JUL 19 1943

Symphony Musicians Open Unique Concert Series

Boston, July 19.—(AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire Festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

First a Mozart Concert

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of 14 concerts comes to an end.

NDAY, AUGUST 23, 19

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra gave the sixth in the series of summer concerts in Sanders Theater yesterday afternoon under the direction of Edgar Curtis. The Burgin String Quartet consisting of Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violins; Jean LaFranc, viola, and Jean Bedetti, 'cello, with the assistance of Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano, were the guest artists. The program was as follows:

A Siegfried Idyll ..... Wagner
Piano Quintet, Op. 57 ..... Shostakovitch
Symphony in B-flat major (Op. 10, No. 2) ..... Haydn
Water Music ..... Handel

A pleasant concert, all things considered, but possibly not up to its predecessors in program interest. It may have merely been too long what with the tenuous tedium of the Siegfried Idyll and the cerebral complexity of the opening movements of the Shostakovitch Quintet, which likewise seems to go on forever. But with the wry Scherzo, the concert picked up and finished strong.

The Prelude and Fugue of the Quintet are actually exceedingly fine, perhaps the finest things in contemporary chamber music, but (and the deficiency is purely personal), they're somehow not easy to take in mid-summer. Strong, scholarly, serious and even gloomy, they belong to less informal seasons. Paradoxically, though, the three concluding movements are practically Pops. The Scherzo is vigorous and funny; the Intermezzo lush and sentimental and the Finale semi-gay and charming.

The quintet is especially interesting for the novel manner in which Shostakovitch balances the piano and the strings, the former being used somewhat as a frame for the latter as the pianist's hands, widely separated, play simultaneously in the topmost and bottommost registers. It's a really significant composition, no doubt about it, and well worth the hearing. And it was excellently played yesterday by the Burgin Quartet with Jesus Maria Sanroma as pianist. The ensemble had technic, of course, but it also had drive and vigor and the proper feeling for Shostakovitch's special idiom.

The Haydn symphony, like the Haydn symphony last week, was a rare piece. Scored for two oboes, two horns and strings, it was enchanting throughout its brief ten minutes. The same holds for Handel's Water Music, four sections of which were done. Regrettably, Mr. Curtis omitted the singularly beautiful Air, but made up for the loss somewhat in the sprightly performance he induced from the musicians. He over-sentimentalized the Idyll a bit, but generally speaking, his conducting was sound and his taste excellent. The orchestra sounded especially good, too. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual Hall at 8:30 P. M.

[101]

CAMBRIDGE CONCERT

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The greatly improved atmospheric conditions may have had something to do with it, but it seemed to this observer that the fifth programme of the Boston Symphony's new summer series as heard at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, yesterday afternoon was the best to date, and each of the others has had much to recommend it. The conductor yesterday was G. Wallace Woodworth and in addition to the customary small orchestra, he had at his command the summer chorus of Harvard and Radcliffe. Together with Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, these student singers took part in a performance of Mozart's seldom heard cantata, "Regina Coeli."

An admirable work, admirably performed by all concerned, this cantata was not the only unfamiliar music of the afternoon. Indeed, it has been the chance to hear the unusual that has made these summer concerts so valuable. Mr. Woodworth's first semi-novelty was Bach's Prelude to the cantata, "Ich hatte viel Bekuemmernis," scored for oboe and strings. Here is Bach at his most treasurable and in the half churchly surroundings of the Harvard auditorium, this beautiful and moving music was heard to wonderful advantage.

The remaining novel item was Haydn's Symphony No. 80 in B minor, composed about 1783 or, roughly speaking, 10 years earlier than the 12 "London" Symphonies, by which Haydn is best known today. Yet here and there this earlier work seemed more striking than its celebrated successors. Few of Haydn's symphonies are written in the minor mode, and this of itself, lent a certain distinction to the fiery opening Allegro and to the Minuet. Minor minuets are rare enough, but the most arresting movement was the Finale with its baffling rhythm and its curious foreshadowings of all sorts of later tendencies. To Mr. Woodworth much thanks, not only for the pieec itself, but for the fine performance.

Between them Bach and Mozart furnished the rest of the programme. From the former came the Third Brandenburg Concerto and from the latter the Serenade known as "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." To each of them the smaller string orchestra proved singularly flattering. When 60 or 70 men get sawing away on the Third Brandenburg with its pounding rhythms, its intricate counterpoint, there is always a faint suggestion of the power house. At New England Mutual Hall this evening this delightful concert will come to

SUMMER CONCERT

Yesterday afternoon brought at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, the last but one of the summer concerts by "first desk" and other players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Edgar Curtis conducted. The programme one of the most rewarding in a generally interesting series, listed Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," the Piano Quintet of Shostakovitch, an unfamiliar Symphony in B-flat major, attributed to Haydn and the "Water Music" of Handel.

Originally published under Haydn's name in 1772 and bearing the opus number, 10, No. 2, this little symphony was later thought to be the work of brother Michael and was not included in the complete edition of Josef's works. Hans Gal, who effected its re-publication in London in 1939, believed that the internal evidence was sufficent to prove its authenticity and no less an authority than Sir Donald Tovey has backed him up. Whichever brother wrote the tiny symphony—it takes only 10 minutes to play—it is wholly charming and, although it would be one of his earliest works in the form, it does have its indubitable Haydnesque touches. It was exquisitely set forth yesterday.

The other orchestral numbers may be grouped as a pair of musical gifts, Wagner's to his wife and Handel's to his English sovereign, George the First.

An orchestra of 16 played the Idyll on the stairs at Tribschen on that Christmas morn in 1870. It may often be heard today from a symphony orchestra with full quota of strings. Yesterday some 20 players gave it a satisfying presentation, but one is well advised to forget the opera in these chamber performances. Sturdy Handel with British overtones served to bring the concert to an agreeable close. Here and elsewhere young Mr. Curtis conducted with the authority we have come to expect from him.

Between them, the Burgin String Quartet (Messrs. Burgin, Kripps, LaFranc and Bedetti) and Jesus Maria Sanroma did exceedingly well by Shostakovitch's Quintet. Like most things that the gifted Russian has given it is of uneven worth but its bright spots more than atone for those that are relatively ineffective. The programme will be repeated this evening at New England Mutual Hall.

PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS

JUL 19 1943

Musicians Will Appear as Soloists

Boston Symphony to Give Unique Series of Concerts

BOSTON, July 19.—(AP)—Top-flight members of the Boston Symphony orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

Wartime Development

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

Presentation Beautiful

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-Major Piano Concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three areas tastefully and all of the men performed admirably in the many solo passages.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of fourteen concerts come to an end.

Aug 16

MUSIC

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings ..... Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" ..... Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) ..... Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor ..... Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthfull cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

Aug 16

MUSIC

BY RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principal and other players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fifth of its current series of summer symphony concerts in Sanders theater auditorium yesterday afternoon under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. Margaret Codd Goldovsky, soprano, was the soloist, and the assisting artists were Fernand Gillet, oboe, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for Strings ..... Bach
Prelude to Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis" ..... Bach
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for Strings, (K. 525) ..... Mozart
Regina Coeli, Cantata (K. 108) ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 80 in D minor ..... Haydn

It was G. Wallace Woodworth day at the fifth of the "seersucker symphonies" yesterday. The program was nice and classical, the assisting artists were musicianly, the ensemble was bright and dexterous and the temperature was wondrously uninsistent. But the chiefest delight was the conducting of G. Wallace Woodworth.

He's known best, of course, as a choral conductor, and the exceeding merit of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society singing in concert is certainly his particular glory. Facing a student choral group and facing an orchestra of professional super-musicians (a category unique to the Boston Symphony), however, are different matters, but not, it must be said, to Mr. Woodworth. His conducting was not short of brilliant throughout.

Obviously, he has in the first place all the baton technic, the command of the orchestra and the musicianship which are the basic requirements, but he has much more. His grasp is fundamental so his conducting style is always natural and athletic. His interpretative sensitivity is exceedingly keen—as witness the nuance of the amusing laendler in Haydn's fine D minor symphony—but he doesn't make a fetish of it. His technic is straightforward, yet not laboriously so, and he isn't given to excess in any department. Aside from his purely musical accomplishments, he is an interesting and even exciting conductor to watch. In fine, he has that singularly elusive quality of personality in his conducting, and while you can't quite pin it down, its presence is undeniable. And it lifted yesterday's concert to a high place on the final roll call.

Well, that leaves a meager space to talk about the music. The high points were certainly Fernand Gillet's performance on the oboe of Bach's noble Prelude to his 21st Cantata, and the performance by the entire ensemble of Haydn's saucy D minor symphony, a little-known gem if there ever was one. Mozart's youthful cantata "Regina Coeli," well and tastefully done by the orchestra and assisting artists, rather failed to come up to expectations as music despite moments of beauty and exaltation. Both the Brandenburg Concerto, done with a truly Bach-proportioned orchestra of 10 string and harpsichord, and the favorite "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" went off delightfully, the latter especially sounding particularly grateful. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual hall at 8:30.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 19 1943

Planes Guard Concert Crowds On Esplanade

BOSTON, Aug. 19 (UP) — Metropolitan District Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman has revealed that Esplanade Summer concert audiences have been protected by an umbrella of airplanes patroling the ocean for possible enemy action.

Hultman made the disclosure last night at the final concert in the series. He said that officials of the commission were in constant communication with the Army as a safeguard against enemy bombers.

The commissioner said that police had prepared for rapid evacuation of the crowd of music-lovers who lolled on the Charles River Embankment listening to music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From

Boston Herald

AUG 18 1943

Esplanade Concerts Guarded by Planes

Boston, Aug. 19 (UP) — Metropolitan District Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman has revealed that Esplanade summer concert audiences have been protected by an umbrella of airplanes patroling the ocean for possible enemy action.

Hultman made the disclosure last night at the final concert in the series. He said that officials of the commission were in constant communication with the army as a safeguard against enemy bombers.

The commissioner said that police had prepared for rapid evacuation of the crowd of music-lovers who lolled on the Charles river embankment listening to music played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
~~EAGLE~~

Tribune

AUG 18 1943

Planes Protected Concert Audiences

BOSTON, Aug. 19 (UP)—Metropolitan District Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman has revealed that Esplanade summer concert audiences have been protected by an umbrella of airplanes patroling the ocean for possible enemy action.

Hultman made the disclosure last night at the final concert in the series. He said that officials of the commission were in constant communication with the Army as a safeguard against enemy bombers.

The commissioner said that police had prepared for rapid evacuation of the crowd of music-lovers who lolled on the Charles river embankment listening to music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

JUL 19 1943

Symphony Musicians Open Unique Concert Series

Boston, July 19.—(AP)—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire Festival—in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire Festival, to summer resorts or to former homes abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the-ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

First a Mozart Concert

The first concert was devoted entirely to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" serenade. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three arias.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of 14 concerts comes to an end.

NDAY, AUGUST 23, 19

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Summer Symphony

The principals and other players of the Boston Symphony orchestra gave the sixth in the series of summer concerts in Sanders Theater yesterday afternoon under the direction of Edgar Curtis. The Burgin String Quartet consisting of Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violins; Jean LaFranc, viola, and Jean Bedetti, 'cello, with the assistance of Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano, were the guest artists. The program was as follows:

A Siegfried Idyll ..... Wagner
Piano Quintet, Op. 57 ..... Shostakovitch
Symphony in B-flat major (Op. 10, No. 2) ..... Haydn
Water Music ..... Handel

A pleasant concert, all things considered, but possibly not up to its predecessors in program interest. It may have merely been too long what with the tenuous tedium of the Siegfried Idyll and the cerebral complexity of the opening movements of the Shostakovitch Quintet, which likewise seems to go on forever. But with the wry Scherzo, the concert picked up and finished strong.

The Prelude and Fugue of the Quintet are actually exceedingly fine, perhaps the finest things in contemporary chamber music, but (and the deficiency is purely personal), they're somehow not easy to take in mid-summer. Strong, scholarly, serious and even gloomy, they belong to less informal seasons. Paradoxically, though, the three concluding movements are practically Pops. The Scherzo is vigorous and funny; the Intermezzo lush and sentimental and the Finale semi-gay and charming.

The quintet is especially interesting for the novel manner in which Shostakovitch balances the piano and the strings, the former being used somewhat as a frame for the latter as the pianist's hands, widely separated, play simultaneously in the topmost and bottommost registers. It's a really significant composition, no doubt about it, and well worth the hearing. And it was excellently played yesterday by the Burgin Quartet with Jesus Maria Sanroma as pianist. The ensemble had technic, of course, but it also had drive and vigor and the proper feeling for Shostakovitch's special idiom.

The Haydn symphony, like the Haydn symphony last week, was a rare piece. Scored for two oboes, two horns and strings, it was enchanting throughout its brief ten minutes. The same holds for Handel's Water Music, four sections of which were done. Regrettably, Mr. Curtis omitted the singularly beautiful Air, but made up for the loss somewhat in the sprightly performance he induced from the musicians. He over-sentimentalized the Idyll a bit, but generally speaking, his conducting was sound and his taste excellent. The orchestra sounded especially good, too. The concert is to be repeated tonight in the New England Mutual Hall at 8:30 P. M.

[101]

LAUREL, MISS.
LEADER CALL

AUG 19 1943

Bostonians Get Best of Music In Gas Shortage

(By Associated Press)
BOSTON, July 19.—Topflight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra began a unique series of concerts today—thanks to the ban on pleasure driving and the cancelling of the Berkshire festival— in which every man appeared, or will appear, as a soloist.

The unusual programs—the kind real musicians dream about—obviously were designed to present music, old and new, that ordinarily failed to fit into the standardized patterns of symphonic and chamber work.

The idea developed when wartime restrictions prevented first-desk men from making customary excursions to the Berkshire Festival, to summer resorts or to former homes, abroad.

Virtuoso musicians, who never had time to play together during busy winter months in the desired out-of-the- ordinary combinations, took advantage of the present opportunity, and as a result musicwise Bostonians subscribed to the series in droves.

The first concert was devoted enterily to Mozart's works, and included some of the best of his lesser-known compositions. Boris Goldovsky, noted for his Mozart interpretations, conducted for the most part, changing roles with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's famous concert master, in one number.

The twenty musicians played beautifully and sometimes beyond compare. In the delightful G-Major piano concerto, Goldovsky brought out all of Mozart's inherent wit and Burgin (then conducting) kept the orchestra in perfect proportion, permitting those marvelous woodwind passages full scope.

In turn Burgin played the violin solo in the "Haffner" seranade (Goldovsky conducting) with astonishing assurance and skill. Mrs. Margaret Codd Goldovsky sang three Arias tastefully and all of the men performed admirably in the many solo passages.

Other musicians will have further opportunities for extended solo work before the series of fourteen concerts come to an end.

Milwaukee, Wis.
Sentinel
7-25-43

Boston Symphony Presents Gabriel Faure on Record

The music of Gabriel Faure has an inner glow, an intensity of spirit, which becomes apparent only after several hearings. The first impression of his "Pelleas and Melisande" suite, fashioned from the incidental music he wrote for the play, is likely to be vague. But soon Faure's ideas take form, flowing along with an air of quiet dignity, suggesting rather than declaring, sharing deep emotions rather than giving them full rein. This is the kind of music in which Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra shine and they do it superbly (Victor M-941).

Sibelius' incidental music for the same Maeterlinck play is contained in the collection including "En Saga" (Victor M-658) and the extra side of the Seventh symphony (Columbia M-524), all Beecham directed. The filler for the Faure album is a rousing performance of Rimsky-Korsakow's "Dubinushka."

* * *

About the time the inveterate listener begins to think Mendelssohn is getting tiresome, along comes such a recording as that of the "Scotch" symphony by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra (Columbia M-540). For all that the critics have complained about Mitropoulos' high pressure tactics, here the rhythms snap, the graceful phrases dance and gambol, the romantic passages sing with a tenderness more deeply moving than the fluent avowals which well so easily from Mendelssohnian scores. It is the best version yet of the "Scotch" symphony, and one of the Minneapolis orchestra's finest recordings.

* * *

Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting symphony continue their single record series of popular extracts with Rubinstein's "Melody in F," a Moussorgsky "Gopak" and the "Procession of the Sardar" from Ippolitov-Ivanov's "Caucasian Sketches" (Columbia 71464D). The "Procession" is well done, if not stirring, and the other pieces are tolerable.

In an old time "Songfest" (Victor 11-8453) the Boston "Pops" dips deeply into the well of undying sentiment and brings out a bucketful of melody. The pieces included are "Pack up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag," "Smiles," "Till We Meet Again," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "My Wild Irish Rose," "Sweet Adeline"—you know the rest.—E. P. H.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 29 1943

PLAIN MILK BOTTLE NOW IN ORCHESTRA

Joins Instruments of Boston Symphony in Musical Fantasy.

BOSTON (AP), — Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are presenting a sort of midsummer night's fantasy during the third program of a unique series of concerts—spanning nearly 400 years in time and requiring the use of such extraordinary instruments as the ancient descant viol, the ultra-modern electric violin and the common or back-door-step variety of milk bottle.

Presumably this is the milk bottle's debut with a major symphony ensemble. It is played with a lead pencil, held firmly in the right hand. The bottle—clean and filled with water — stands with other percussion instruments and is struck sharply now and again during the first concert performance of Paul Frederic Bowles' suite from his opera "The Wind Remains."

Composer New York Born.

The 32-year-old, New York born composer uses the brittle, glassy tones of the bottle during a "Servant's Dance" and again in the finale of the suite—generally a bright and rhythmically clever creation. The orchestration requires 16 men, many of them playing wind instruments, appropriately enough.

Bowles also includes an electric violin in the score—a skeleton instrument without sounding boards, but equipped with two control knobs for color and volume. A wire leads from the violin to a loudspeaker. Tonal characteristics vary from the low of a G-string to the high of an E-flat clarinet and are heard to best advantage during the amusing "Clown's Dance."

For contrast members of the Boston Society for Ancient Instruments play a half dozen pieces out of the distant past on instruments of that time—the descant viol, treble viol, viola da gamba, violone and harpsichord. The refined music, some of it dating from 1551, suggests the powdered wigs and stately manners of ancient courts, with occasional overtones of more lively goings-on.

Leonard Bernstein Conductor.

The Bowles suite, a fragile concerto by Stravinsky and the lovely Brahms second serenade for small orchestra, all are conducted by Leonard Bernstein, one of the promising young musicians who studied at the Berkshire music school under the Boston Symphony's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

About the only thing lacking is a milk wagon. This wouldn't have been too surprising either—for composer Bowles is also author of a work called "Horse Eats Hat."

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 26 1943

Jennie Tourel, Richard Burgin Give Concert

Large Audience Hears Third Program Of Sedgwick Series

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The large audience which attended the third of the series of five concerts being sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in Sedgwick Hall in Lenox last night heard an interesting program and witnessed an unusual spectacle. There were three groups of songs by Jennie Tourel, a young mezzo-soprano, newly arrived in this country and swiftly advanced in the public's esteem, and two groups of violin solos by the concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin. Mr. Burgin was accompanied by Mrs. Mary Power; Miss Tourel was supported and even carried by Mr. Bernstein.

Miss Tourel is a diminutive package of spirit and dramatic expressiveness. An ample and opulent voice, warm and vibrant, easily emitted in an extensive range, articulate in Italian, French, Russian and Spanish, she sang with histrionic talent in every song. A tendency to pull all the stops at some place in every song deprived her climaxes, after a while, of impact, but her grace and flexibility, charm and tenderness, control and training, were undeniable. The Recitative and Air tendre from the Cantata "L'Impatience" of Rameau, and the Chanson Triste of Henri Duparc, as well as her Faure songs, and the Rachmaninoff and Joaquin Nin selections, all were done with striking effect. While maintaining a well-restrained deportment she imbued each song with a vivid theatrical sentiment, completely by the use of the graphic extremes of her voice.

Mr. Burgin is a highly-accomplished and long-experienced violinist, and thus his every effort displayed his mark as a performer. He does everything violinistically well, even his faults. A Valse Mignonne of Paul Juon and an excerpt from the Suite "The States of Brazil" by Darius Milhaud were welcome novelties, played glacially in addition to a half dozen of more familiar numbers. (Milhaud was an assistant at the French legation at the end of the last war.)

Miss Tourel, for an encore, sang a little suite of five children's songs by her accompanist. Grotesque trifles, humorous, perhaps, even cute. Miss Tourel tried too valiantly to give them a substance, which their composer, we hope, did not expect. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky added to the gala of the evening when, at the completion by Miss Tourel of Rachmaninoff's "Floods of Spring," he rushed from his chair to grasp her hand in all-out appreciation and artistic capitulation. In a few short introductory remarks before the program began, Dr. Koussevitzky had indicated what the audience was to expect from the artists of the evening. The Boston Orchestra conductor explained that he would refrain from speaking last night as his turn was to come this coming Saturday evening, when he is scheduled to talk as the fourth event of the series. Mr. Bernstein will again perform on this same program.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 30 1943

Koussevitzky, Bernstein Share Program

Fourth in Music Series Given in Sedgwick Hall

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The fourth entertainment in the series of five being sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation was held in Sedgwick Hall in Lenox Saturday evening. In the first half of the evening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky read papers on three subjects akin to music; in the concluding half, Leonard Bernstein played music of Bach, Liszt, Chopin and Copland on the piano.

Whatever Dr. Koussevitzky says about music and its ramifications merits attention. Probably the audience which attended Saturday evening might have listened eagerly to more personal reminiscences and associations than to the single reference to an exchange of correspondence with Sibelius regarding a tempo indication in the fourth Symphony. Most of the matter read was in the abstract, and, except for the paper on "Interpretation in Music," had been published before.

Of course it is on the subject of interpretation that Koussevitzky should have most to say, but it can certainly be said infinitely better with his back to the audience before his orchestra than behind a lectern. One may not challenge statements from one so admittedly worthy of the privilege of stating them, but they cannot be convincing any more than can one's preference in the matter of olives. From the few short examples which Bernstein played under the orchestra leader's indications to exhibit the difference in interpretation between Mendelssohn and Wagner, it was not shown, nor did Dr. Koussevitzky attempt to show, which was more correct or authoritative.

An audience very often runs ahead, or behind, its reader. It must have entered the minds of some in the audience to inquire how facts concerning tempo can have been transmitted down through generations. It became possible, of course, when Maelzel, a friend of Beethoven, devised an instrument to measure time in relation to music, which became the metronome we now know. We wish Koussevitzky had gotten down to cases more. It would have been so illuminating if he had offered reasons for his own choice of tempi. Such statements, as provocative as they surely would be, would be profitable to student and layman alike. It is a very hazardous subject. One's personal senses or receiving set are quite variable materials, and the emotions a performer feels are not necessarily received by his hearers as transmitted and intended.

Bernstein in His Element

Bernstein was in his element in the percussive sonorities of Aaron Copland's sonata. His ability to project a composition prompted him to attempt to give it substance and color with his greatest and most serious effort. Applying the preceding remarks concerning interpretation by the Boston orchestra's leader, our imagination, in the sonata's last movement, visualized the composer's pedal effects as old John Silver trying to yank his peg leg out of a hole in the deck. Bernstein gave the sonata vitality and form. His playing of the Bach chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, four Chopin mazurkas and the F sharp major nocture, and the Liszt thirteenth rhapsody, were musically impressive, displaying a wide and varied imaginative capacity.

For encores Bernstein played a Brahms intermezzo and, in accordance with the less-than-formal dignity of the series, a shot of boogie-woogie. The atmosphere of intimacy which has pervaded several incidents of the series, to the amusement of the spectators, perhaps justified this. Our only objection to it would be if it were offered as a reward for sitting through all that had preceded.

BLANK PAGE

1942 --- Backcopies

Symphony in Union Talks With Petrillo

American — July 14-42

For some 20 years the Boston Symphony Orchestra artists and trustees have been engaged in a running fight with unionism but today the Boston Evening American learned exclusively that the two sides at last have sat down to talk things over.

Exclusive

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY Talked Things Over Boston Evening American Photo

JAMES PETRILLO
Union President
International News Service Photo

Out of an agreement reached on one point may come finally, it was learned, capitulation of the No. 1 symphonic group of the country, only symphony orchestra in the nation not a member of the American Federation of Musicians.

According to this information, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, represented by its trustees and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky on one side, and the Federation officials, headed by Pres. James C. Petrillo on the other, have had an important meeting and the American Federation of Labor organization has made an important concession.

KOUSSEVITZKY GAINS

Although the orchestra trustees and Unionist Petrillo have maintained a discreet silence, word comes out of Chicago that Conductor Koussevitzky, now at Tanglewood preparing for the annual Berkshire Music Festival, has been allowed several privileges heretofore denied by the union.

These are in connection with the training of young musicians of promise during the preparatory summer schedule of the orchestra. In previous years, Petrillo has not only refused to allow such youngsters of promise to train with the Boston Symphony, but he has even refused to discuss the matter.

This admittedly will save the famous orchestra from threatened decadence, because so tightly has the union drawn lines around the recalcitrant Boston Symphony that it was in danger of becoming anemic, not only because of the lack of new blood but because it was losing many of its artists to other outfits.

ORCHESTRA INJURED

At least, according to observers, it would not have been long before the Boston Symphony lost its class 1 standing in its field.

Another serious threat to the orchestra's prestige has been the union's barring of appearances with the orchestra by such leading artists as Efrem Zimbalist, Joseph Szigeti, Lawrence Tibbetts and others.

Petrillo's point in the controversy

Symphony In Union Dicker

Continued From Page 3

regarding these artists is that union members cannot be permitted to play or appear with a non-union orchestra.

He has also succeeded in keeping the Boston Symphony off the air, barring it from making phonograph records, preventing Dr. Koussevitzky's appearance as guest conductor of other symphonic groups, members of the union, and even barring the Bostonians from the Philharmonic Festival.

CENTRALIA, WASH.
CHRONICLE

JUL 11 1942

The Czar's Edict

Whether the threatened relegation of juke boxes to the junk heap is a good move or a bad thing is beside the point.

There is the much more important question of whether James C. Petrillo, the all-high czar of the American Federation of Musicians, is acting in the public's or Petrillo's interest when he puts forth such an edict as he did in Dallas, Texas, where he told the union's convention that after August 1 union musicians would make no more records for juke boxes.

Petrillo's record indicates that he cares nothing about the public. Petrillo's only interest in life is to see that his musicians get as much money as possible. He shows no interest in music or the enjoyment of music. Petrillo's union forces theaters to hire and pay salaries to musicians who are not needed and who do not play a single note, which is plain racketeering. He blacklisted Serge Koussevitsky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony, because he would not join the union.

All this is very fine for Petrillo. It keeps him in an office to which some power is attached—and he is not so big that he won't "go after" high school bands—and it assures him a very lucrative salary. Yes, it is very fine for Petrillo. But what about the public which has to pay higher prices for theater tickets because of Petrillo. And what about the musicians who are slaves of the uinon and are steadily losing respect as citizens and as musicians?

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 28 1942

CONCERT GROUP DOES NOT ALTER WINTER PLAN

Has Received No Direct Threat for Booking, Non-Union Symphony

Because they have not been informed from any source, other than news stories, that bringing the Boston Symphony orchestra to the Auditorium will result in James Petrillo, head of the Musicians' Union, banning the hall to all union musicians, officials of the Springfield Community Concerts and Junior League yesterday decided to continue as planned and it therefore appears that the Boston Symphony will play here as one of the Community Concerts announced series.

Those who met yesterday were Atty. Raymond T. King, president of the Community Concerts; Mrs. John E. Mitchell, chairman of the program committee, and Mrs. Russell F. Swett, chairman of the Junior League concert committee.

The first indication that the Boston Symphony might not play here was contained in a tentative routing of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra which had Springfield on its itinerary. Later word filtered unofficially into the city that James Petrillo had said that he would ban any hall used by the Boston players and would not permit any musicians within his organization to perform in them. This would mean an entire disruption of not only the Community Concerts, but the Wagner series, as the majority of musicians belongs to the union. However, no official word has come from the czar of the Musicians Union who is now under fire from several sources, particularly for his recent banning from the air of the Student Orchestra at Interlochen, Mich.

It is possible that, if any official information should reach the officials of the Springfield Community Concerts that the rest of their program would be banned by Petrillo, changes would be made, but until such word comes, the group has decided to continue as planned. There is always the possibility that the Boston Symphony players may become unionized, it was said.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 30 1942

Ears of the Air

By LEWP

There's a war going on, so a lot of people are taking advantage of it to put across some pet ideas. It would be some sort of sabotage to block the efforts of these people. Take James C. Petrillo, for example, he picks this time to invoke a lot of trouble in radio and music circles. He puts the squeeze on radio and the concert-going public—as in Springfield—to force non-union musicians out of business, or more properly put—to put union musicians in.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is an excellent example of the indirect squeeze play. The union doesn't say the Boston Symphony can't play here. Not at all. It simply tells the Community Concerts Association that if the Boston Symphony plays in the Auditorium, no union musicians thereafter may enter the Auditorium. They've done it before without contamination, but they can't do it now. It's different now. There's a war going on. So the squeeze play is on.

* * *

It's working out similarly in radio. Mr. Petrillo says no more records may be made for radio or juke boxes. No one knows why he didn't think of that when radio first began using records and juke boxes first began to crop out in every refreshment parlor in the country. But there's a war on now. This is a good time to put on the squeeze. The public needs to have its morale knocked out. How better to do that than create minor irritations caused by just such actions. If the network fails to come to terms, put the network on the spot. "If they'd just put live musicians on the job, everything would be OK." Simple, isn't it.

* * *

Dance bands now are missing from the late schedule of two networks, NBC and Mutual, two of them from NBC and 15 or so from Mutual. The same underlying cause is behind the omission in both cases, contract differences between affiliated stations and local musicians' unions. The NBC station is KSTP, while two stations of Mutual are affected, KFRC, and WARM. In addition, the Grant Park Saturday night concerts on NBC have been canceled because of the KSTP situation. Whether these summer concerts, which are remote pickups from the Chicago Park and were originated a couple of years ago by Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, will be resumed after settlement of the KSTP differences has not been announced.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 29 1942

BLACKLIST MAY SHELVE CONCERTS HERE

Such Action Likely If Boston Symphony Plays at Auditorium, Union Says

If union musicians refuse to play in the Municipal auditorium, it's not the result of any feud with the Boston Symphony orchestra, but rather because of the by-laws of the union itself.

That is the stand of the Hampden County Federation of Musicians, according to Edwin T. Lyman, executive secretary. The union, Lyman said, is making no attempt to dictate to the Community Concert association, but it does say that if the Boston orchestra plays, nobody else does.

For the present, the union is taking the stand that there has been no official engagement of the Boston orchestra, particularly since the association has a tentative agreement to substitute the Philadelphia orchestra which, like all the other big symphonies in the country is unionized. The association decided to make plans for a substitute in case the musicians' union decided to blacklist the auditorium. This, Lyman said, it would do as soon as the announcement is official.

Blacklisting the hall would virtually deprive the city of all its major musical attractions. Other offerings in the community concert series would be kept away, since practically all the instrumentalists belong to the AFM, while the YMCA Sunday afternoon series would be unable to present the Cleveland and the National symphonies as announced if the blacklist is ordered.

Hardest hit will be the Wagner course, directed by E. H. Marsh of this city since he plans to bring the Indianapolis orchestra, the Farbman little symphony and an opera which is scheduled to have orchestral accompaniment.

Annual concerts and balls such as those of the policemen, firemen and a number of local fraternal organizations would be out since none of the major dance bands, locally or nationally are non-union. Such a show as "Echoes of Broadway," one musician pointed out today, would be impossible since no union musician would knowingly violate the by-laws.

May Fight Ban on Symphony at Springfield

SPRINGFIELD, July 27—Faced with a threatened blacklisting of Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra plays there, officials of the Community Concert Association said tonight they may challenge the power of James C. Petrillo, National Musicians' Union president, who issued the blacklist threat.

Though he said the association had received no written warning concerning the blacklisting, Pres. Raymond T. King said it would "sit tight" in its plans to bring the Boston Symphony here in February as part of its non-profit Winter concert series.

CLINTON, MASS.
ITEM

JUL 14 1942

SYMPHONY MAY UNIONIZE

Boston, July 14—For some 20 years the Boston Symphony Orchestra artists and trustees have been engaged in a running fight with Unionism but the two sides at last have sat down to talk things over, the Boston Evening American said today.

Out of an agreement reached on one point may come finally, it was learned, capitulation of the No. 1 symphonic group of the country, only symphony orchestra in the nation not a member of the American Federation of Musicians.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 20 1942

Objects to Cancellation of Symphony Broadcast.

By Dorothy Doe Colburn.

Newspapers carried an announcement that the National Broadcasting Co. had canceled a half-hour program of symphony orchestra music by high school musicians at the Interlochen National Music Camp at the demand of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor.

The point to be gained by such a demand is difficult to see. The program probably will not be replaced by a period of music by professional musicians, and the high school students are in no sense competitors of the union members. Hence there is no immediate benefit to be derived by the union unless Mr. Petrillo considers an opportunity to exhibit his power as such a benefit. This is only one in a series of incidents in which this union official has attempted to dictate what shall be done in the field of musical art. Witness the threat to boycott the Springfield (Mass.) Auditorium if the Boston Symphony Orchestra, long acclaimed as the equal of any in this country and a non-union group, were allowed to play there.

We are now engaged in a great war to preserve the liberties which we possess. These liberties would seem to include the right of musicians to play wherever people wish to hear them, whether or not they have paid a union official the money he demands.

It would seem to me—and I am sure that there are others who feel likewise—that the policy of placing such unwarranted power in the hands of one man is unwise for the nation, as well as unfair to musicians and music lovers.

Manhattan.

[104]

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

JUL 11 1942

Proposing The Real Thing

San Francisco (pop. 634,536) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Indianapolis (pop. 386,972) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Boston (pop. 770,816) has one of the three or four finest orchestras in the world.

Minneapolis (pop. 492,370) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Rochester (pop. 324,975) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Cleveland (pop. 878,336) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Cincinnati (pop. 455,610) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Pittsburgh (pop. 671,659) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Washington (pop. 663,091) has a fine symphony orchestra.

Baltimore (pop. 859,100) has a fourth-class pickup orchestra which is gathered together after Christmas each year, put through a few rehearsals and pushed out on to the stage of the Lyric disguised as a real symphony orchestra.

Considering its vicissitudes, this pick-up orchestra does remarkably well. At any rate, it manages to get through the standard pieces in the symphonic repertory without making many serious mistakes. And occasionally, owing to some happy concatenation of circumstances, it actually produces a fine concert.

But there isn't a single member of this on-again-off-again orchestra, and there isn't a single conductor among the numerous ones who have led it in the course of its up-and-down career, who considers it anything more than a feeble substitute for the real thing.

Mr. Reginald Stewart, who has been doing some big things with the Peabody Institute, now emerges with a scheme for providing Baltimore with a genuine orchestra—not an orchestra brought together for a handful of concerts, but an orchestra which shall have the opportunity to play together for a full season.

Baltimore likes to call itself a musical city. If Mr. Stewart's ambitious scheme goes through, we'll find out quickly enough whether Baltimore is as interested in music as are Indianapolis, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh.

DECATUR, ILL.
REVIEW

JUL 13 1942

From Other Editors

THE CZAR'S EDICT.

Clinton (Iowa) Herald: Whether the threatened relegation of juke boxes to the junk heap is a good move or a bad thing is beside the point.

There is the much more important question of whether James C. Petrillo, the all-high czar of the American Federation of Musicians, is acting in the public's or Petrillo's interest when he puts forth such an edict as he did in Dallas, Texas, where he told the union's convention that after August 1 union musicians would make no more records for juke boxes.

Petrillo's record indicates that he cares nothing about the public. Petrillo's only interest in life is to see that his musicians get as much money as possible. He shows no interest in music or the enjoyment of music. Petrillo's union forces theaters to hire and pay salaries to musicians who are not needed and who do not play a single note. He blacklisted Serge Koussevitsky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony, because he would not join the union.

All this is very fine for Petrillo. It keeps him in an office to which some power is attached—and he is not so big that he won't "go after" high school bands—and it assures him a very lucrative salary. Yes, it is very fine for Petrillo. But what about the public which has to pay higher prices for theater tickets because of Petrillo? And what about the musicians who are slaves of the union and are steadily losing respect as citizens and as musicians?

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 6 - 1942

Musicians' Union Plans to Put Finger On Auditorium If Hub Symphony Comes

Lyman Says Petrillo Determined to Prevent Nonunion Organization From Playing in Community Concert Here; Junior League Considers Alternate

James C. Petrillo, national president of the Musicians' union, is determined to place the Municipal auditorium on the AFM "forbidden territory" list if the Boston Symphony orchestra plays there this season.

Edwin H. Lyman, secretary of the musicians' local, admitted today that Petrillo planned to crack down on the nonunion Hub orchestra, which has been announced by the Community Concert association, though he expressed hope that an amicable solution might be reached.

Placing a hall on the "forbidden territory" list means that no union musician can play there and since the Biston orchestra is the only major nonunion symphony in the country concert courses as well as individual attractions are due to be disrupted should the Petrillo edict be enforced.

Junior League Watching Situation

Tentative arrangements to bring the Philadelphia orchestra here next February in the Community series rather than the Koussevitzky orchestra have already been made by the Junior league, sponsors of the Community course, although no official announcement has been made yet.

AMERICAN JEWISH OUTLOOK
PITTSBURGH, PA.
7/17/42

Smith College Blacklisted By Musicians Federation

Action Comes As Result of Concert of Boston Symphony.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 13 (AP).—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) because the non-union Boston symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official announced today.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland symphony and the Rochester philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1942

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Columbia Broadcasting System were in the throes of negotiation last week, their hope being to broadcast the three Sunday afternoon concerts of the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass. The first concert is this afternoon, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Neither Columbia nor Dr. Koussevitsky were wont to discuss what made their plans impossible, which in the Summer of 1942 generally means that James C. Petrillo, head of the musicians' union, had some objections. Dr. Koussevitzky is, of course, the conductor of the Boston Symphony, the only major nonunion band in the country. The symphony has been prevented for some time from appearing on the air or making recordings because of its status.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

AUG 5 - 1942

Which Is Patriotic?

IT IS easy to say that "art must die last in a war" but not the way Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra makes the assertion. He not only means what he says, but he is underwriting his belief to the tune of $30,000 so that the Berkshire Music Festival, which had been called off, may go on in spite of war and war's uncertainties.

In other words, if the festival loses money and somebody has to meet the cost, Dr. Koussevitsky engages to pay out of his own pocket. The doctor doesn't need to talk about maintaining morale, his money talks for him. And his conduct is refreshingly unlike that of Mr. James C. Petrillo who at the moment seems chiefly preoccupied with plans for depriving the American public of as much of the solace and inspiration of music as he can.

FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 14 1942

Symphony Orchestra Confers With Union on Organization

BOSTON, July 14 (INS)—For some 20 years the Boston Symphony orchestra artists and trustees have been engaged in a running fight with Unionism but the two sides at last have sat down to talk things over, the Boston Evening American said today.

Out of an agreement reached on one point may come finally, it was learned, capitulation of the No. 1 symphonic group of the country, only symphony orchestra in the nation not a member of the American Federation of Musicians.

EMPORIA, KAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1942

Petrillo Stops Radio Recordings

All Federal Pleas To Halt Music Ban Ignored

New York, Aug. 1 (AP) — James Caesar Petrillo's ban on the making of musical recordings and transcriptions for public use went into effect today but, thanks to expanded stocks, the public won't feel it until today's songs start grating on the ears.

The blunt-speaking president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFFL) killed the last hope that the ban might be rescinded when he advised Elmer Davis, director of war information, last night that the order would be carried out.

He Won't Budge.

Davis had appealed to Petrillo to cancel the ban as a "patriotic duty"; pointing out the tonic effect of music on public morale; similar appeals had come from Attorney General Biddle and Chairman James L. Fly, of the Federal Communications commission.

But Petrillo wrote Davis:

"I cannot grant your request. x x x You have been absolutely misinformed throughout."

There were indications that official action to fight the order was near. Attorney General Biddle authorized a suit to seek an injunction against enforcement of the order some time ago, and the New York Times said the suit would be filed in Chicago either today or Monday.

Juke Boxes His Peeve.

Petrillo declared the stoppage was ordered in an effort to put more union musicians to work, that thousands among his 138,000 members were idle because of the use of juke boxes by dance halls and recordings by radio stations throughout the United States and Canada.

Petrillo said in his letter to Davis that the musicians union would continue to make recordings "for the armed forces or for the President of the United States." He also stressed that his order did not apply to the making of records for home consumption. The manufacturers would have to guarantee that the records will not be used commercially.

Radio stations playing recordings will continue to use records on hand—and they have thousands—and replacements probably will be available for damaged discs recorded before today.

Thus, the public will begin to feel the ban when it starts asking for recordings of songs published after today. Recording companies said they had good supplies of current records—probably enough to last a year.

Called "Spite Act".

Pres. Neville Miller of the National Association of Broadcasters charged that Petrillo sought to deprive the public of recorded music "to get at the few establishments which he believes should employ union musicians."

The Department of Justice called the order "unjust both to labor and the public," saying it would force small radio stations out of business, and injure restaurants, hotels and small taverns and entertainment spots as well as advertising agencies, musical motion pictures and electrical transcription make.

Davis said the ban would hinder dissemination of vital war information by forcing the closing of small stations.

In a letter to Fly, Petrillo charged the government with "protecting radio stations, advertising agencies and record makers in a "combination" against the AFM.

He told reporters that 500,000 juke boxes in the United States and Canada had thrown some 8,000 musicians out of work and that several thousand more had no jobs because of 500 radio stations "which do not employ a single live musician."

Most of the leading dance bands and symphony orchestras of the nation—with the exception of the Boston symphony orchestra — are composed of AFM musicians.

Union musicians make almost all recordings and transcriptions and whether any companies would use non-union bands was not immediately known.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

AUG 3 - 1942

Highest Paid Union Chief, That's Musicians' Petrillo

"Music hath charms" for James Caesar Petrillo, energetic and opulent dictator of American musicians, whose ban on musical recordings for public use went into effect Aug. 1 in defiance of of Government appeals.

It makes no difference to him whether the notes are sour or sweet—and they're likely to become tiresome if his ban sticks—as long as the producer of the notes is one of Jimmy's own and is paid the union fee.

Jimmy Petrillo may have a Government fight on his hands for his latest action, but for taking the care of his boys James Caesar is handsomely paid. In fact, to the tune of $46,000 a year, plus expenses, he's the highest paid labor leader in the United States.

Tops Murray's Salary

His salaries and expenses from the two organizations he heads—$20,000 from the American Federation of Musicians and $26,000 from the Chicago Federation of Musicians—exceed the combined salaries of the leaders of the CIO and the A. F. of L., Philip Murray and William Green.

John L. Lewis is paid only about half as much for running the powerful United Mine Workers of America.

The Petrillo formula is no secret. It's as simple as two-and-two making four.

Mr. Petrillo says in effect:

"Music isn't free. If you want it, hire a trained man to produce, then pay him."

Suit Threatened

His two latest edicts based on that formula have aroused public resentment throughout the country, have brought the threat of an injunction suit under the Federal anti-trust laws, have heaped on him the criticism of the National Assn. of Broadcasters.

Mr. Petrillo has decreed, first, that union musicians shall make no more records for radio programs or for juke boxes; and, second, that the National Broadcasting Co. must hold to its agreement not to allow amateur musicians to compete with professionals.

In the latter order, he forced the cancellation of the annual broadcasts of the noted student orchestra of National Music Camp, at Interlochen, Mich.

Four Grades in 9 Years

That was a bitter disappointment to many boys who some day in the normal course of events, probably would become members of Mr. Petrillo's own union.

Of course, Jimmy was a boy himself once, although a not-too-bright one, by his own admission.

He spent nine years getting through the first four grades of the elementary school in Chicago, the city where he was born and raised and where today he is a figure to be reckoned with—politically, culturally and financially.

Born in Chicago

For him it can't be said that he is not familiar with the problems of musicians. He is a musician himself, although he has found it much more profitable to control music than to play it.

He was born 50 years ago on Chicago's West Side, the son of an Italian ditch-digger and one of five children.

He began taking music lessons when he was eight years old and occasionally tooted his trumpet in the Hull House band, which numbered among its members Benny Goodman, the swingster.

Played Trumpet

Jimmy was a trumpeter with a newsboys' band and at 18 he organized his own orchestra.

His first union affiliation, incidentally, was with the American Musicians Union, then a rival to the Chicago Federation of Musicians, which Petrillo now heads.

At 22, he was president of the American Musicians' Union, but three years later, in 1917, when he was defeated for re-election, he bolted to the Chicago Federation of Musicians and took up anew his rapid rise in unionism ranks.

Got $100 Weekly

In 1922, he was making $100 a week as president of the union. A clever organizer, he directed the unionization of musicians in Chinese restaurants and raised their pay scale from $20 to $40 a week; contracted with hotels, theaters and radio stations to employ union musicians exclusively; instituted a six-day week, then a five-day week for his musicians—for seven days' pay.

He plodded into the national limelight when in 1931 he was elected to the executive board of the American Federation of Musicians.

Nine years later he was president of the organization. He saw to it that his predecessor, Joseph N. Webber, was given a $20,000 annual pension.

Barred Name Bands

Then Jimmy went into action with gusto.

On his order, five days after his election, sustaining name bands were barred from NBC and CBS networks in an attempt to force two stations to pay union wages to a given number of musicians, regardless of whether they were needed.

Mr. Petrillo then forbade RCA-Victor to allow the Boston Symphony Orchestra to make records. The Boston Symphony, non-union, previously had been barred from radio.

He notified the American Guild of Musical Artists that the Guild's instrumentalists must join the union or face a ban on radio and recording work. The New York State Supreme Court refused to grant an injunction sought by Lawrence Tibbett, president of the AGMA, which would have prevented Petrillo from enforcing his order.

Caused Historic Rumpus

This dispute caused a historic rumpus. Mr. Petrillo, answering the AGMA argument that artists such as Iturbi and Heifetz, could not be classified as rank-and-file musicians, said that Heifetz was just a fiddler, like any fiddler. He later explained that he meant no reflection on Heifetz.

Mr. Petrillo's efforts toward improving the standards of living among musicians were successful. The pay of musicians was increased and employment was spread. The membership of the national organization rose to 138,000; of the Chicago local, to 10,000.

In Chicago, the members pay $16 a year dues; two per cent tax on earnings of less than $35 a week; four per cent on earnings of $35 or more a week. Their doctor bills are paid by the union and their families receive $1000 death benefits from the union.

Got Salary—Plus

Mr. Petrillo has been good to the Chicago local and the local has been good to him. In 1937, the local paid him his salary, plus:

$5000 for expenses; $25,000 for an armored car and bodyguard; a $25,000 house; $1700 for garden maintenance; $12,000 worth of furnishings; and $16,000 for income taxes.

His peeves are "canned music" and amateur competition.

'Stand-By' Invoked

He has ways of dealing with each. In the case of "canned music" he makes radio stations pay union wages to "pancake turners," those who turn over the records for transcribed music on radio shows.

He invokes his "stand-by" pay principle in the case of amateur talent hired for free entertainment.

Under this rule, union musicians must be paid for work they could have done if the amateurs hadn't been hired.

His peeve against juke boxes is based on his contention that the jukes are depriving his men of 100 million dollars a year in wages.

That much would be paid to musicians, he says, if they worked in taverns and night spots where juke boxes provide the music.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

AUG 1 1942

RECORDING BAN NOW IN EFFECT

Petrillo Orders Musicians to Cease Making Transcriptions for Radio

NEW YORK, Aug. 1 (AP)—James Caesar Petrillo's ban on the making of musical recordings and transcriptions for public use went into effect today, but, thanks to expanded stocks, the public won't feel it until today's songs start grating on the ears.

The stocky, blunt-speaking president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) killed the last hope that the ban might be rescinded when he advised Elmer Davis, Director of War Information, last night that the order would be carried out.

Davis had appealed to Petrillo to cancel the ban as a "patriotic duty," pointing out the tonic effect of music on public morale; similar appeals had come from Attorney General Biddle and Chairman James L. Fly, of the Federal Communications Commission.

But Petrillo wrote Davis:

"I cannot grant your request. * * * You have been absolutely misinformed throughout."

There were indications that official action to fight the order was near. Attorney General Biddle authorized a suit to seek an injunction against enforcement of the order some time ago, and the New York Times said the suit would be filed in Chicago either today or Monday.

Petrillo declared the stoppage was ordered in an effort to put more union musicians to work; that thousands among his 138,000 members were idle because of the use of juke boxes by dance halls and recordings by radio stations throughout the United States and Canada.

The union head said records for public use comprised 95 per cent of the music heard in both countries.

To Make Records for U. S.

Petrillo said in his letter to Davis that the Musicians' Union would continue to make recordings "for the armed forces or for the President of the United States." He also stressed that his order did not apply to the making of records for home consumption, although the manufacturing companies would have to guarantee that the records would not be used commercially.

The companies contend this is impossible because once a record is sold there is no way to restrict its use.

Radio stations playing recordings will continue to use records on hand—and they have thousands—and replacements probably will be available for damaged discs recorded before today.

Most of the leading dance bands and symphony orchestras of the nation—with the exception of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—are composed of AFM musicians.

Union musicians make almost all recordings and transcriptions and whether any companies would use non-union bands was not immediately known.

NOGALES, ARIZ.
HERALD

AUG 1 - 1942

Ban On Canned Music Enforced

Petrillo Rejects Pleas To Lift Ruling As 'Patriotic Move'

NEW YORK, Aug. 1—(AP)—James Caesar Petrillo's ban on the making of musical recordings and transcriptions for public use went into effect today but, thanks to expanded stocks, the public won't feel it until today's songs start grating on the ears.

The stocky, blunt-speaking president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) killed the last hope that the ban might be rescinded when he advised Elmer Davis, director of war information, last night that the order would be carried out.

Davis had appealed to Petrillo to cancel the ban as a "patriotic duty," pointing out the tonic effect of music on public morale; similar appeals had come from Attorney General Biddle and Chairman James L. Fly, of the Federal Communications Commission.

But Petrillo wrote Davis:

"I cannot grant your request. * * * You have been absolutely misinformed throughout."

Action Near

There were indications that official action to fight the order was near. Attorney General Biddle authorized a suit to seek an injunction against enforcement of the order some time ago, and the New York Times said the suit would be filed in Chicago either today or Monday.

Petrillo declared the stoppage was ordered in an effort to put more union musicians to work; that thousands among his 138,000 members were idle because of the use of juke boxes by dance halls and recordings by radio stations throughout the United States and Canada.

He told reporters that 500,000 juke boxes in the United States and Canada had thrown some 8,000 musicians out of work and that several thousand more had no jobs because of 500 radio stations "which do not employ a single live musician."

(Most of the leading dance bands and symphony orchestras of the nation—with the exception of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—are composed of AFM musicians.

(Union musicians make almost all recordings and transcriptions and whether any companies would use non-union bands was not immediately known.)

The union head said records for public use comprised 95 per cent of the music heard in both countries.

NORWICH, N.Y
CHENANGO TELEGRAPH
7/10/42

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — The Springfield municipal auditorium was threatened with "blacklisting" if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. Edwin H. Lyman, secretary of the Springfield local of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) said that other companies and symphony orchestras would be forbidden to appear if the Boston orchestra, a non-union organization was allowed to play. The Springfield Junior League said that it had tentatively booked the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra to appear in place of the Boston Symphony if an agreement could not be reached.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

AUG 2 - 1942

Petrillo's Ban

Music Czar's Order on Recordings Goes Into Effect

NEW YORK, Aug. 1 (AP)—James Caesar Petrillo's ban on the making of musical recordings and transcriptions for public use went into effect today, but, thanks to expanded stocks, the public won't feel it until today's songs start grating on the ears.

The stocky, blunt-speaking president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) killed the last hope that the ban might be rescinded when he advised Elmer Davis, Director of War Information, last night that the order would be carried out.

There were indications that official action to fight the order was near. Attorney General Biddle authorized a suit to seek an injunction against enforcement of the order some time ago, and the New York Times said the suit would be filed in Chicago by Monday.

Petrillo declared the stoppage was ordered in an effort to put more union musicians to work; that thousands among his 138,000 members were idle because of the use of juke boxes by dance halls and recordings by radio stations throughout the United States and Canada.

The union head said records for public use comprised 95 per cent of the music heard in both countries.

Petrillo said in his letter to Davis that the musicians' union would continue to make recordings "for the armed forces or for the President of the United States." He also stressed that his order did not apply to the making of records for home consumption, although the manufacturing companies would have to guarantee that the records would not be used commercially.

The companies contend this is impossible because, once a record is sold, there is no way to restrict its use.

Radio stations playing recordings will continue to use records on hand — and they have thousands — and replacements probably will be available for damaged discs recorded before today.

Thus, the public will begin to feel the ban when it starts asking for recordings of songs published after today.

Recording companies said they had good supplies of current records, probably enough to last a year.

Most of the leading dance bands and symphony orchestras of the Nation—with the exception of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—are composed of AFM musicians.

Union musicians make almost all recordings and transcriptions and whether any companies would use non-union bands was not immediately known.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE SUN

AUG 1 1942

Petrillo Refuses To Cancel Order As Patriotic Duty

NEW YORK, Aug. 1 (A.P.)—James Caesar Petrillo's ban on the making of musical recordings and transcriptions for public use went into effect today but, thanks to expanded stocks, the public won't feel it until today's songs start grating on the ears and new tunes are demanded.

The blunt-speaking president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) killed the last hope that the ban might be rescinded when he advised Elmer Davis, director of war information, that the order would be carried out.

Davis had appealed to Petrillo to cancel the ban as a "patriotic duty," pointing out the tonic effect of music on public morale; similar appeals had come from Atty. Gen. Biddle and Chairman James L. Fly, of the federal communications commission.

Juke Boxes Denounced

In a letter to Fly, Petrillo charged the government with "protecting" radio stations, advertising agencies and record makers in a "combination" against the A. F. M.

He told reporters that 500,000 juke boxes in the United States and Canada had thrown some 8000 musicians out of work and that several thousand more had no jobs because of 500 radio stations "which do not employ a single live musician."

There were indications that official action to fight the order was near. Biddle authorized a suit to seek an injunction against enforcement of the order some time ago, and the New York Times said the suit would be filed in Chicago today or Monday.

Threat to War Effort Cited

Davis said the ban would hinder dissemination of vital war information by forcing the closing of small stations.

Most of the leading dance bands and symphony orchestras of the nation—with the exception of the Boston symphony orchestra—are composed of A. F. M. musicians.

Union musicians make almost all recordings and transcriptions and whether any companies would use non-union bands was not known immediately.

Petrillo said the musicians' union would continue to make records "for the armed forces or for the president of the United States." He stressed that his order did not apply to the making of records for home consumption, although the manufacturing companies have to guarantee that the records would not be used commercially.

Control Impossible

The companies contend this is impossible because, once a record is sold, there is no way to restrict its use.

Radio stations playing recordings will continue to use records on hand—and they have thousands—and replacements probably will be available for damaged discs recorded before today.

Thus, the public will begin to feel the ban when it starts asking for recordings of songs published after today. Recording companies

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1942

STILL PLANNING TO BRING BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE

King Says Musicians' Union Fails to Give Formal Notice to Association

Raymond T. King, president of the Community Concerts Association, said last night that inasmuch as the association had heard nothing officially from the musicans' union plans to bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra here this season remained unchanged.

Do Not Know

"We haven't heard anything officially from any labor union," King declared, adding that he had instructed local musician labor leaders that their objections of stand should be put into writing to receive the serious consideration of association authorities.

"We do not know their official attitude. All that we have heard is just newspaper talk that the union will place the Auditorium on its blacklist if the Boston Symphony comes here," King declared.

Edwin H. Lyman, executive secretary of Hampden County Musicians' Union, however, said that apparently the association feels that the union is fooling.

"Mean Business"

"We mean business," Lyman said. "If the Boston Symphony plays here, the Municipal Auditorium will be placed on the blacklist. And that is that."

Lyman said that King was trying desperately to have the union commit itself in writing but that the union officials have officially expressed their stand in the newspapers. If the association still insists on bringing the Boston Symphony, a nonunion orchestra, here this season there is nothing that the Hampden County musicians or James Petrillo can do but to place the Auditorium on the place list.

In Bylaws

"Sure, the Boston Symphony played here several times," Lyman agreed, "but that was when Joe Weber was head of the musicians' union. Weber was old and he let a lot of things go by the boards. But Petrillo is different. He insists that the law be laid down. And there is a law in the bylaws which states that any hall in which a nonunion orchestra plays will be placed on the blacklist. Petrillo is merely enforcing this law."

Lyman reiterated his stand that the union was not telling the concert association that the Boston Symphony could not play here.

"We are still saying that if the Boston Symphony plays here the hall will be placed on the blacklist," he said.

No Substitution

King also declared that the association was not contemplating bringing the Philadelphia Symphony here in place of the Boston Symphony.

Lyman declared that if the Philadelphia Orchestra were brought here everybody would be happy.

"I'll bet that if the four leading orchestras in the country were placed on a stage behind a screen no one in the world could tell which was which," Lyman said, adding that Springfield music lovers certainly would not suffer from having Stokowski's orchestra here in place of the Boston organization.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1942

When Caesar Petrillo Went Too Far

From the Providence Journal

"THE ON'Y thing is," said Orville LaToot, the penny whistle virtuoso and head of Penny Whistlers Local 586, "the on'y thing is, Jimmie Petrillo went too far.

"Jimmie done fine when he put a five-piece band in every drug store, saloon, roadhouse and hamburger joint in place of the juke boxes. And he done all right when he made the Boston Symphony orchestra carry a couple of Swiss bell-ringers and a musical-glasses specialist.

"Me, I wouldn't be the one to say he done wrong making every Salvation Army band carry a bagpiper and an extra drum for to throw the nickels on. And, as you know, I was with him tooth and nail when he amalgamated Penny Whistles with Sweet Potato and Ocarina into Local 586.

"But I confess I got nervous when he went after the cuckoo clocks. After all, I says, a cuckoo don't exactly cut a musician out of a job. But Jimmie says, "Cuckoos make music for nothing. Free music is out." So I give in to his logic.

"But when he said, 'I'm gonna fix it so's nobody in this here country can bust into song without my permission, not even a hymn or a lullaby—I'm gonna fix it so's they can't even listen without a card,' I says to myself mebbe that's goin' too far. The American peepul is easy-going, and if they can't bust into song, they'll bust somewheres else. And that's just what they done.

"And now that it's all over and a person can listen to music without a card, and Jimmie's gone up the spout, it looks as if they were just letting him blow hisself up a-purpose, bigger'n bigger, like the mamma frog in the fable, till he busted."

PETRILLO AND RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

J. Caesar Petrillo—by an apt coincidence, that really is his name—asks a Chicago court to dismiss federal anti-trust charges against his American Federation of Musicians, which last week ordered its members to cease playing for phonograph records or electrical transcriptions. He claims the Government did not charge his union with trying to suppress free competition.

What the Government charged was that Petrillo is trying to destroy the recording business. How a "destroyed" business can freely compete, and how the public can enjoy the benefits of free competition within a business which has ceased to exist, is not made clear by Mr. Petrillo's lawyers. The phrase "combination in restraint of trade" is often used in connection with anti-trust actions. Mr. Petrillo's union is certainly a combination, and if total destruction is not "restraint," what is?

However, the pessimistic New York Times thinks that in prosecuting under the Sherman Act, "the Department of Justice starts with two strikes against it." It points to the record of Supreme Court judgments, giving labor unions "sweeping immunities" from the anti-trust acts and from the federal anti-racketeering act. "Indignation against Petrillo will be stupid or "hypocritical unless it recognizes the need for "changing the state of law which makes possible "the irresponsible private dictatorship he represents," says The New York Times.

In any case, the Petrillo ban is effective for the moment—no records are being made. It will be an interesting tid-bit for some future historian of the Second World War, that while North America was mobilizing for the greatest struggle in history, an international union took allegedly legal steps to smash an industry with the avowed intention of creating several million unnecessary jobs.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 8 - 1942

Property Board Enters Fight Over Boston Symphony's Date

City property committee members expect to find out where the Community Concert association stands in the current controversy over the appearance of the Boston Symphony orchestra here in March, at a meeting at City hall on Friday night.

Said Committee Member J. Albert Greenaway, "The board has asked the Community Concert association to have a representative at the meeting next week. Then perhaps we can find out where all this is leading."

Atty Raymond T. King, to whom the invitation has been issued, was not available for comment, but it was expected that the association would be represented at the property board session.

The action came when the city committee found itself confronted with pleas from two sources not to become involved in a fracas with James C. Petrillo.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

AUG 9 - 1942

Berkshire Festival Is Paying Off

Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Festival, which was canceled and then recalled by his sole backing, is paying off. Two thousand two hundred people "came in everything from hayricks to tandem bikes," the Lenox, Mass., press announced. Bravo, Mr. Koussevitzky! Boss Petrillo, of AFL, his age-old enemy, is probably smarting under the blow.

ASHTABULA, OHIO
STAR-BEACON

AUG 7 - 1942

one-half carat blue-white diamond. He is visibly a successful man and, as he takes pride in pointing out, he got where he is without stealing. "Hell," he says, "I don't have to steal. When I need anything, I just let my boys know about it and they give it to me."

When he refers to his "boys," Petrillo means specifically the organized musicians of Chicago, whose local he has headed since 1922 and who pay him $26,000 of his net official take. Their devotion is such that in 1937, when they learned that Petrillo would like a quiet place in the country for week ends, they bought him the old Edward G. Uihlein estate at Fontana on Lake Geneva, Wis., a resort supported by tired, rich Chicagoans. All told that year, according to union figures, Petrillo cost Local 10 $110,700. The sum included $25,000 for the house, $12,000 to furnish it, $1700 to take care of the famous Uihlein evergreen grove, $16,000 to pay income taxes, $25,000 for a bulletproof car and lope when excited about some outrage done to the "rights" of his boys. At such times he also shouts and pounds his desk violently.

Petrillo is a man of large and catholic dislikes. In a long list of phobias that includes actors, lawyers, John L. Lewis and New York City, as well as canned music and musical amateurs, the Boston Symphony Orchestra ranks near the top. The Boston orchestra had been playing, and presumably chafing, under open-shop conditions ever since its founding in 1881. When Petrillo undertook to right this ancient wrong, his reception was disappointing. Unlike Dr. Stock of the Chicago Symphony, who does "whatever Mr. Petrillo says," Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky was aloof. The orchestra's players, who are paid as well as, or better than, players in any other big-league symphony in the world, were on the whole indifferent. Rebuffed, Petrillo notified broadcasters and recording companies that the Boston orchestra was banned he explained. "Why fool around with these little guys? We got to get this thing straightened out."

★ ★ ★

As it turned out, Stimson was busy with other matters and Petrillo was reduced to negotiating with some generals. "You know how them generals are," he remarked later. "Pin a couple of tin medals on 'em and you can't do a thing wit' 'em." Petrillo soon had them eating out of his hand, however. The upshot was that Army bands could play, provided Petrillo was notified and gave his consent beforehand.

Last week Petrillo found that the Army was giving him trouble again. When the Times Square Service Men's Center in New York City had its formal opening, the orchestra from This Is The Army was asked over to help make the dedication merry. Like all the performers in the show, the musicians are Army men, subject to no authority but the Army's. However, the head of the New York Defense own tastes. Its centerpiece is a mahogany desk: "the biggest damn desk," he assures visitors, "I could find at Marshall Field's." The floor is covered with a deep-pile Oriental rug—"You should know what it cost," says Petrillo. In Chicago, too, there is much less trouble with lawyers. Chicago law has an easy-going quality for those well connected, and Petrillo's connections are impeccable. He is on bosom terms with Mayor Ed Kelly.

Although unsympathetic persons call him a dictator, Petrillo is devoted, he says, to the principles of American freedom and democracy, and he often points to himself as an example of what can be accomplished under the American Way. He was born in 1892 in a bedraggled section of Chicago's West Side, one of five offspring of an immigrant Italian sewer digger. He was ambitious from the beginning. As a boy he sold newspapers, ran elevators in Loop office buildings, and drove a delivery cart. He was an indifferent student, however. After lacking in tact, were extremely effective. The Chinese signed up in such droves that Local 10, impressed, elected him a vice-presidency. He became president a few years later, in 1922.

The subsequent affairs of Petrillo and Local 10 merge like a lovers' knot. Their mutual history can be summed up briefly. In 1922 the local had 4000 members. Prohibition had ruined the cabaret and family saloon, and with them had gone hundreds of jobs for musicians. When talking pictures came along a few years later, hundreds more jobs went. As a result the union "scale," such as it was, was an unenforceable fiction. Today Local 10 has 11,000 members. The wage scale is not only rigid as a Baptist's morals but far above what it was in 1922 and substantially higher than that of any of the A. F. M.'s 750 other locals. "I done it," Petrillo says, "by giving the boys service."

Continued Tomorrow

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE SUN

AUG 1 1942

Petrillo Refuses To Cancel Order As Patriotic Duty

NEW YORK, Aug. 1 (A.P.)—James Caesar Petrillo's ban on the making of musical recordings and transcriptions for public use went into effect today but, thanks to expanded stocks, the public won't feel it until today's songs start grating on the ears and new tunes are demanded.

The blunt-speaking president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) killed the last hope that the ban might be rescinded when he advised Elmer Davis, director of war information, that the order would be carried out.

Davis had appealed to Petrillo to cancel the ban as a "patriotic duty," pointing out the tonic effect of music on public morale; similar appeals had come from Atty. Gen. Biddle and Chairman James L. Fly, of the federal communications commission.

Juke Boxes Denounced

In a letter to Fly, Petrillo charged the government with "protecting" radio stations, advertising agencies and record makers in a "combination" against the A. F. M.

He told reporters that 500,000 juke boxes in the United States and Canada had thrown some 8000 musicians out of work and that several thousand more had no jobs because of 500 radio stations "which do not employ a single live musician."

There were indications that official action to fight the order was near. Biddle authorized a suit to seek an injunction against enforcement of the order some time ago, and the New York Times said the suit would be filed in Chicago today or Monday.

Threat to War Effort Cited

Davis said the ban would hinder dissemination of vital war information by forcing the closing of small stations.

Most of the leading dance bands and symphony orchestras of the nation—with the exception of the Boston symphony orchestra—are composed of A. F. M. musicians.

Union musicians make almost all recordings and transcriptions and whether any companies would use non-union bands was not known immediately.

Petrillo said the musicians' union would continue to make records "for the armed forces or for the president of the United States." He stressed that his order did not apply to the making of records for home consumption, although the manufacturing companies have to guarantee that the records would not be used commercially.

Control Impossible

The companies contend this is impossible because, once a record is sold, there is no way to restrict its use.

Radio stations playing recordings will continue to use records on hand—and they have thousands—and replacements probably will be available for damaged discs recorded before today.

Thus, the public will begin to feel the ban when it starts asking for recordings of songs published after today. Recording companies said they had enough current records to last a year.

Both Defiant

President Neville Miller of the National Association of Broadcasters charged that Petrillo sought to deprive the public of recorded music "to get at the few establishments which he believes should employ union musicians."

"As long as I am president of the A. F. M.," Petrillo wrote, "I shall encourage such action (the ban) on the canned music situation until such time as these people who are getting rich on our services while our people get no money see fit to employ members of the American Federation of Musicians."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1942

STILL PLANNING TO BRING BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE

King Says Musicians' Union Fails to Give Formal Notice to Association

Raymond T. King, president of the Community Concerts Association, said last night that inasmuch as the association had heard nothing officially from the musicans' union plans to bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra here this season remained unchanged.

Do Not Know

"We haven't heard anything officially from any labor union," King declared, adding that he had instructed local musician labor leaders that their objections of stand should be put into writing to receive the serious consideration of association authorities.

"We do not know their official attitude. All that we have heard is just newspaper talk that the union will place the Auditorium on its blacklist if the Boston Symphony comes here," King declared.

Edwin H. Lyman, executive secretary of Hampden County Musicians' Union, however, said that apparently the association feels that the union is fooling.

"Mean Business"

"We mean business," Lyman said. "If the Boston Symphony plays here, the Municipal Auditorium will be placed on the blacklist. And that is that."

Lyman said that King was trying desperately to have the union commit itself in writing but that the union officials have officially expressed their stand in the newspapers. If the association still insists on bringing the Boston Symphony, a nonunion orchestra, here this season there is nothing that the Hampden County musicians or James Petrillo can do but to place the Auditorium on the place list.

In Bylaws

"Sure, the Boston Symphony played here several times," Lyman agreed, "but that was when Joe Weber was head of the musicians' union. Weber was old and he let a lot of things go by the boards. But Petrillo is different. He insists that the law be laid down. And there is a law in the bylaws which states that any hall in which a nonunion orchestra plays will be placed on the blacklist. Petrillo is merely enforcing this law."

Lyman reiterated his stand that the union was not telling the concert association that the Boston Symphony could not play here.

"We are still saying that if the Boston Symphony plays here the hall will be placed on the blacklist," he said.

No Substitution

King also declared that the association was not contemplating bringing the Philadelphia Symphony here in place of the Boston Symphony.

Lyman declared that if the Philadelphia Orchestra were brought here everybody would be happy.

"I'll bet that if the four leading orchestras in the country were placed on a stage behind a screen no one in the world could tell which was which," Lyman said, adding that Springfield music lovers certainly would not suffer from having Stokowski's orchestra here in place of the Boston organization.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1942

When Caesar Petrillo Went Too Far

From the Providence Journal

"THE ON'Y thing is," said Orville LaToot, the penny whistle virtuoso and head of Penny Whistlers Local 586, "the on'y thing is, Jimmie Petrillo went too far.

"Jimmie done fine when he put a five-piece band in every drug store, saloon, roadhouse and hamburger joint in place of the juke boxes. And he done all right when he made the Boston Symphony orchestra carry a couple of Swiss bell-ringers and a musical-glasses specialist.

"Me, I wouldn't be the one to say he done wrong making every Salvation Army band carry a bagpiper and an extra drum for to throw the nickels on. And, as you know, I was with him tooth and nail when he amalgamated Penny Whistles with Sweet Potato and Ocarina into Local 586.

"But I confess I got nervous when he went after the cuckoo clocks. After all, I says, a cuckoo don't exactly cut a musician out of a job. But Jimmie says, "Cuckoos make music for nothing. Free music is out." So I give in to his logic.

"But when he said, 'I'm gonna fix it so's nobody in this here country can bust into song without my permission, not even a hymn or a lullaby—I'm gonna fix it so's they can't even listen without a card,' I says to myself mebbe that's goin' too far. The American peepul is easy-going, and if they can't bust into song, they'll bust somewheres else. And that's just what they done.

"And now that it's all over and a person can listen to music without a card, and Jimmie's gone up the-spout, it looks as if they were just letting him blow hisself up a-purpose, bigger'n bigger, like the mamma frog in the fable, till he busted."

PETRILLO AND RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

J. Caesar Petrillo—by an apt coincidence, that really is his name—asks a Chicago court to dismiss federal anti-trust charges against his American Federation of Musicians, which last week ordered its members to cease playing for phonograph records or electrical transcriptions. He claims the Government did not charge his union with trying to suppress free competition.

What the Government charged was that Petrillo is trying to destroy the recording business. How a "destroyed" business can freely compete, and how the public can enjoy the benefits of free competition within a business which has ceased to exist, is not made clear by Mr. Petrillo's lawyers. The phrase "combination in restraint of trade" is often used in connection with anti-trust actions. Mr. Petrillo's union is certainly a combination, and if total destruction is not "restraint," what is?

However, the pessimistic New York Times thinks that in prosecuting under the Sherman Act, "the Department of Justice starts with two strikes against it." It points to the record of Supreme Court judgments, giving labor unions "sweeping immunities" from the anti-trust acts and from the federal anti-racketeering act. "Indignation against Petrillo will be stupid or "hypocritical unless it recognizes the need for "changing the state of law which makes possible "the irresponsible private dictatorship he represents," says The New York Times.

In any case, the Petrillo ban is effective for the moment—no records are being made. It will be an interesting tid-bit for some future historian of the Second World War, that while North America was mobilizing for the greatest struggle in history, an international union took allegedly legal steps to smash an industry with the avowed intention of creating several million unnecessary jobs.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 8 - 1942

Property Board Enters Fight Over Boston Symphony's Date

City property committee members expect to find out where the Community Concert association stands in the current controversy over the appearance of the Boston Symphony orchestra here in March, at a meeting at City hall on Friday night.

Said Committee Member J. Albert Greenaway, "The board has asked the Community Concert association to have a representative at the meeting next week. Then perhaps we can find out where all this is leading."

Atty Raymond T. King, to whom the invitation has been issued, was not available for comment, but it was expected that the association would be represented at the property board session.

The action came when the city committee found itself confronted with pleas from two sources not to become involved in a fracas with James C. Petrillo.

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

AUG 9 - 1942

Berkshire Festival Is Paying Off

Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Festival, which was canceled and then recalled by his sole backing, is paying off. Two thousand two hundred people "came in everything from hayricks to tandem bikes," the Lenox, Mass., press announced. Bravo, Mr. Koussevitzky! Boss Petrillo, of AFL, his age-old enemy, is probably smarting under the blow.

ASHTABULA, OHIO
STAR-BEACON

AUG 7 - 1942

HIS MONEY TALKS

It is easy to say that "art must die last in a war" but not the way Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra makes the assertion. He not only means what he says, but he is underwriting his belief to the tune of $30,000 so that the Berkshire Music Festival, which had been called off, may go on in spite of war and war's uncertainties.

In other words, if the festival loses money and somebody has to meet the cost, Dr. Koussevitzky engages to pay out of his own pocket. The doctor doesn't need to talk about maintaining morale, his money talks for him. And his conduct is refreshingly unlike that of Mr. James C. Petrillo who at the moment seems chiefly preoccupied with plans for depriving the American public of as much of the solace and inspiration of music as he can.

egar are used. Beat addition of oil. A small egg beater is g mayonnaise.

★ ★

IE IS the economing which resembles n making this par-use one of our fine oils.

DRESSING naise Type).

cup oil, one table-
one teaspoon of dry aspoon of salt, one-of cayenne pepper, ne-fourth cup vine-
espoons of corn-mixing bowl. Mix mustard, salt and s important, as dry lly lumpy and this ng will prepare it halgamation with dients. Add sifted oil; also add the stem end downward, and carefully cut off a half inch slice from the rounded part. Lay the slice to one side and scoop out center of tomatoes. Refill with chicken salad, building the salad, up rather high. Place slice which was cut from tomato on top and mask entire tomato with a thin coating of mayonnaise. Arrange on crisp lettuce leaves and serve cold.

CHICKEN SALAD.

One cup cooked chicken, diced, one cup celery, diced, three tablespoons oil, three tablespoons vinegar, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, one-half cup mayonnaise, Capers.

Put diced chicken and celery in a mixing bowl. Mix oil, vinegar, salt, pepper together. Pour over chicken and celery and let marinate for 30 minutes, mixing the salad once or twice during this time. Just before service add the mayonnaise and mix all together. Garnish with a few capers. This amount will stuff four tomatoes.

London Times along Unter den Linden before either of us have figured out what makes home-hugging husbands get so out of hand. In this instance, it's less puzzling than usual, because back of that whistle-clean slate for the last eight years is a record of roving habits that might explain his current restlessness. Handiest gambit I can suggest is to give him several free-style samples of his own peccadilloes. Stay downtown to a movie some evening and let him forage for his own fodder, with no knowledge of where you are or when you'll be home. Don your bonnet and skip off without explanation a night or two, calling on friends for a few hours while he wonders what cooks besides the cabbage next door. Return mystery for mystery, keep your temper under honeyed control and see how he likes home-sharing with someone who can assert her own prerogative of being free, white and gallivanting.

[107]

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
AUG 9 - 1942

Little Caesar of Symphony and Swing

James Petrillo, Who Has Battled Juke Boxes, Radio and Army Bands, Squares Off With Uncle Sam

By Robert Coughlan

Reprinted by Special Permission From LIFE Magazine.

LAST July 10, in a fortnight when every day seemed to bring fresh danger to the American people and their allies, James Caesar Petrillo made his own peculiar contribution to the cause of unity, sacrifice, and national morale. An orchestra of 160 boys and girls had been scheduled to broadcast over NBC from the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich. All arrangements were made; proud parents were listening in. What the parents heard, however, was not the adolescent tootlings of their young but the music of a studio orchestra. The Interlochen broadcast had been canceled on Petrillo's orders because the boys and girls were not members of the American Federation of Musicians which he heads. Since their average age was 15, they were not eligible for membership in the union, whose minimum age requirement is 16.

The contradiction didn't worry Petrillo, who has a flexible mind. "They're amateurs," he said. "When amateur musicians occupy the air it means less work for professionals." The way out would be for the authorities at Interlochen to hire 160 professional musicians at union rates to "stand by"—i. e., do nothing—while the youngsters played.

Although laymen may find it hard to see the difference between this and the regulation "shakedown" as employed in an ordinary racket, the "stand-by" is an institution with the A. F. M. So, for that matter, is Petrillo's dislike for children who play musical instruments in public. A few years ago, when Chicago's civic-minded Daily News bought a giant panda and arranged to have it welcomed by a corps of Chinese Boy Scout buglers, Petrillo insisted that an equal number of his men be hired to stand by. This created an uproar. After several days of buck-passing among the News, the Zoo and the Boy Scouts, the panda arrived and was promptly put on Petrillo's "unfair" list. Since the supply of musical children is unending, Petrillo's problem is chronic. His vigilance never flags, however. Last winter he successfully prevented broadcasts by children in Chicago, Cleveland, Washington, Milwaukee, St. Louis and San Francisco.

★ ★ ★

ALTHOUGH gifted children give him the horrors, Petrillo feels most violently about "canned music" which, he maintains, keeps thousands of live musicians out of work. Petrillo has brooded about this since the days of the old Edison. Last month he served notice on the recording companies that no more phonograph records could be made after July 31 unless the companies guaranteed that they wouldn't be played in juke boxes or over the radio. Since the courts have ruled that the companies have no control over their products after they have been sold, the order means, in effect, that no new recordings at all can be made.

When the final history of craft unionism in America is written, Petrillo will probably take his place as the sturdiest wildflower in the A. F. of L.'s whole unruly garden. His powers over the federation's 130,000 members have astonished, among others, the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice, which has called them "absolute and subject to no control."

In fact, as soon as the department got over its astonishment at Petrillo's arbitrary order it filed suit against Petrillo, the union and other officers charging a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

According to the union constitution Petrillo can call strikes at his discretion, levy fines up to $5000 on any member, and revise or suspend the constitution itself.

No leader of a United States craft or trade is as firmly established in power as Petrillo, nor, by a long sight, as well paid. His yearly salary of $46,000 is not only more than that of any other A. F. of L. leader, but more than the combined salaries of John L. Lewis and William Green. He can afford a suite at the Waldorf when he visits New York. He spends as much as $150 for his suits. He eats expensively and, until the war shut off his supply, drank imported beer. On the index finger of his left hand he wears a two and bodyguards, and $5000 for incidental expenses.

JAMES C. PETRILLO . . . LABOR'S BEST-DRESSED LEADER STEPS OUT TO COMBAT GIFTED KIDS WHO PLAY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Although, he may have had a tiny inkling of what was afoot, Petrillo expressed himself as completely surprised by the boys' gift of the Uihlein place. He was deeply touched, he announced. He likes to think of himself as the benevolent guardian of the boys' interests—a strong man but honest, a diamond in the rough. In 1939 and 1940 he hired a press agent to advance the rough-diamond theory in the newspapers and magazines, with large success. Petrillo plays the role to the hilt. "Me tough?" he asks. "I ain't tough. I'm just a bighearted sap."

★ ★ ★

WHEN pleased, Petrillo has a benign, grandfatherly look set off by crinkly gray hair and a high, balding forehead. Ordinarily, however, his mouth turns down in a querulous line, and behind his rimless spectacles his pale blue eyes are cold and suspicious. He has a dazzling command of profanity which he delivers rapidly in a rasping voice out of the right side of his mouth. Although he is only five feet six inches tall, he weighs almost 180 pounds. Sitting at his desk, he suggests an elderly frog that has just eaten a big and somewhat bitter dragonfly. In repose he relaxes heavily as if saving his strength for some important moment. Once on his feet, he moves rapidly and belligerently, soon working himself up to a fast from the air and phonograph records. "They're washed up," he announced, perhaps too sanguinely. "They're through."

To cripple the orchestra on its home grounds, he also staged a raid on the American Guild of Musical Artists, an AFL union which included virtuosos such as Iturbi, Spalding and Zimbalist. "They're mine," he declared. "They're musicians and they belong to me. Since when is there a difference between Heifetz and a fiddler in a tavern?" Rather than sacrifice concert work in A. F. M. territory, which includes every important musical outlet except Boston's Symphony Hall, most of the virtuosos have signed up with Petrillo, which automatically means that they fill no more dates with the Boston Symphony.

The fact that Koussevitzky and his men continue to play brilliantly and imperturbably despite all this is almost more than Petrillo can bear. Since becoming president of the A. F. M. he has met and routed a dozen seemingly stouter opponents, including the U. S. Army. A year and a half ago, to promote interest in national defense, the Mutual Broadcasting System scheduled a series of variety programs from Fort Dix, using Army talent. Petrillo announced that Army bands couldn't be allowed to play over the air—at least not until he had a chance to talk it over and mark out terms. "Sure, Stimson," Recreation Committee dutifully asked the New York local for permission. He had found the local "most co-operative" in the past; but this time, presumably in line with Petrillo's orders, he was refused. Local Head Jake Rosenberg explained it this way: "If the Army is going to go around playing benefits we might as well fold up. We don't want them to compete with us."

Although this incident stirred up criticism, Petrillo gives way to no man when it comes to patriotism. At his order, his members play The Star-Spangled Banner before and after every program, whether it be in a night club, a Hollywood set or a recording studio. In New York City alone, it is estimated, patriots now stand for the national anthem some 20,000 times a week.

The picture of New Yorkers standing and sitting en masse at his direction doubtless gives Petrillo considerable satisfaction. One of the first constitutional rules he suspended was the one that required the international president to live in New York, seat of A. F. M. headquarters. "What a town!" he says, feelingly. "Everybody in it's a lawyer. I get to town and sit down, and bam! — there's a dozen lawyers, all tryin' to serve a paper on me!" He is happier in Chicago where Local 10 has its own two-story, $600,000 building on West Washington street, and where his office is better suited to his nine years of school he was still bogged firmly in the fourth grade. His schoolmates hung the nickname "Yellow" on him because, he recalls, of his extraordinary courage and pugnacity.

When Petrillo was 8 years old his parents bought him a trumpet. Soon he was tootling in both Jane Addams' Hull House band and the Daily News newsboys' band. By the time he was 14 he had his own eight-piece dance orchestra. After a season at such places as the Hod Carriers Hall and the old West Side Auditorium, he decided to give up his losing fight with the fourth grade and devote his life to music. A few years later he "lost his lip" and had to switch to the drums. Finding the market thin for his services as a drummer, he opened a cigar stand, and later helped run a saloon.

★ ★ ★

IF Prohibition hadn't intervened, Petrillo might have stayed in the saloon business happily, in time becoming a power in his precinct, ward and district. As it was, however, his political talents were forced to find an outlet in the American Musicians Union, a Chicago independent which was then competing vigorously with the A. F. M.'s local unit. At 22 Petrillo was elected president. After three yars he was defeated, which so annoyed him that he joined the A. F. M. His first job there was to organize the town's Chinese restaurants. Petrillo's methods, while

PASTE OVER

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 9 - 1942

Princess Juliana Hears Concert at Tanglewood

Royal Party Attends Third Concert Presented by Student Orchestra Under Koussevitzky; Duo-Pianists Score

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 8.—Royalty was in attendance at Tanglewood tonight. Her Royal Highness, Princess Juliana of The Netherlands was present. In the royal box were the following guests: Madame Rouell (lady in waiting), Mr. and Mrs. Van Tets, Madame Van Walsen, Madame Maryla Lednicka, Mr. Fritze, Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes, Miss Miriam K. Oliver and Miss Taylor of Ottawa.

The dramatic declarations of the Brahms "Symphony, No. 4," filigreed delicacy of Mozart's "E-flat Concerto" for two pianos, and Howard Hanson's "Third Symphony" swept through the "shed" and grounds. It was the third of the symphony concerts presented by the student orchestra of Berkshire Music Center, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. The piano soloists were Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff. There was an attendance of 3500.

Tones Crystal Clear

It is not for the purpose of confirming the unconditional praise we expressed two years ago when these duo-pianists appeared in a Worcester Civic Music concert that we wish to review some of the highlights of their art. That program was almost exclusively devoted to romantic technical extravagances.

Tonight Luboshutz and Nemenoff were confronted with a score of the utmost classical purity, where finesse of phrasing, purity of tone, and exact graduations of volume demanded sharp insight. It is true that the "E-flat Concerto" was written in a period of Mozart's creative life that was not abundantly productive of master works—it is equally true that this concerto does not soar to the high peaks that some of his post-Vienna works do. Nevertheless, under the fingers of these artists it became an episode of magically delicate but crystal-clear tones.

The excellent appraisals of balance were not confined to the pianists. Knowing Koussevitzky's concepts of the classics, one would expect detailed execution, but this reviewer's respect for this youthful orchestra's obedience is ever increasing. The result of tonight's treatment of Mozart was precise dynamic balance. There was pronounced contrast between the more robust first movement, leisurely tender "andante" and the light, frolicksome "rondo." The pianists were accorded hospitable welcome which returned them to the stage many times.

Symphony Opens Program

Howard Hanson's "Third Symphony" opened the program. The harmonic confusions and sometimes aimless wanderings of much that is written today impresses one with the unmistakable academic knowledge of its authors, vast technical shrewdness, and intimate knowledge of the personalities of instruments. But we find ourselves seeking inspirational support for these sounds and we cannot prevent consistent concentration upon structural elements. Howard Hanson said, (in connection with the writing of this symphony)—"a composer should write as he feels." A masterwork need not convey its subject or source of inspiration, but it should inspire. We attribute the absence of any but analytical reaction in no degree to the performances of the orchestra, which was entirely competent.

Although Brahms lived 12 years after completing the "E-Minor Symphony" which was played tonight, it is undoubtedly one of his sovereign orchestral works. Regardless of the degree of fervor with which one worships the music of Brahms, the ineluctable fact remains that much of his early work is far from irreproachable. The modulation of mood from Mozart to Brahms is a defiance. Koussevitzky embarked upon the steady, persistent motion of the first movement with precision. The bold incisive themes (they were not always accurately played by the brasses) which follow were approached with clear rhythmic enunciation, and without the instability or impatience of inexperienced performance. The rather melancholic, but far from pathetic second movement again called attention to the excellence of the wood-wind and string sections. The thematic interplay between these two was posed, particularly in the "triplet-figured" passages. The good-humored "allegro giocoso" was played with decision. The spacious "allegro passionato" was not only brilliant but dazzling.

YORK, PA.
DISPATCH

JUN 20 1942

THE CZAR'S EDICT

Whether the threatened relegation of juke boxes to the junk heap is a good move or a bad thing is beside the point.

There is the much more important question of whether James C. Petrillo, the all-high czar of the American Federation of Musicians, is acting in the public's or Petrillo's interest when he puts forth such an edict as he did in Dallas, Tex., where he told the union's convention that after Aug. 1 union musicians would make no more records for juke boxes.

Petrillo's record indicates that he cares nothing about the public. Petrillo's only interest in life is to see that his musicians get as much money as possible. He shows no interest in music or the enjoyment of music. Petrillo's union forces theaters to hire and pay salaries to musicians who are not needed and who do not play a single note, which is plain racketeering. He blacklisted Serge Koussevitsky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony, because he would not join the union.

All this is very fine for Petrillo. It keeps him in an office to which some power is attached—and he is not so big that he won't "go after" high school bands—and it assures him a very lucrative salary. Yes, it is very fine for Petrillo. But what about the public which has to pay higher prices for theater tickets because of Petrillo. And what about the musicians who are slaves of the union and are steadily losing respect as citizens and as musicians?

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 8 - 1942

BOARD ASKED TO REFUSE HALL FOR BOSTON CONCERT

Councilmen Put in Position of Deciding Union Issue

With two communications now in the hands of the City Property Committee asking that it refuse the Boston Symphony Orchestra the right to play in the Municipal Auditorium, two members of that board this morning, indicated that if the proposed concert is not to take place this fall, but some time early next year, they will decline to act on the request, leaving the issue to be settled by the 1943 board.

Up to Next Board

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman, and Councilman J. Albert Greenway both expressed the view that if the concert were to be in 1943 then the present board should not be expected to act.

The requests to ban the Boston orchestra came from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner concerts.

The committee decided last night that it would call in Raymond T. King, president of the Community Concerts Association, sponsor of the appearance of the Boston Symphony, for discussion of the situation, before determining what course of action to follow.

Both communications urged that the Boston organization, a non-union body, be barred. The Indianapolis Symphony will not be allowed to play here if the Boston orchestra is allowed to play.

This leaves the City Property Committee, as Chairman Lowe sees the situation, in the position of having to determine whether it shall allow the use of the hall for the Boston players, with the prospect of no entertainments with union musicians in the future.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES
CHAMPAIGN, ILL.
NEWS-GAZETTE
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL & REPORTER

AUG 10 1942

Hub Symphony Date In Wrangle

Springfield Told Union Head Will Blacklist Hall If Group Plays

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Aug. 10 (AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 11 1942

SYMPHONY PATRONS APPREHENSIVE HERE

Fear Petrillo May "Blacklist" Theatre Where Orchestra Will Play

Patrons of the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra which is scheduled to play five concerts here starting Oct. 20, were apprehensive last night after reported threats by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to "blacklist" the Springfield, Mass., Municipal Auditorium if the orchestra plays there as scheduled this season. If this threat were carried out, union musicians would be forbidden to play in the Auditorium.

The Springfield concert was "still on the books" last night. The Providence concerts are scheduled for Oct. 20, Nov. 24, Jan. 19, Feb. 16 and April 6, at the Metropolitan Theatre.

Raymond G. Williams, assistant secretary-treasurer of the Music Association of Providence, which leases the Metropolitan Theatre for the concerts, said yesterday that the leases already had been signed. He said he preferred not to comment on the Springfield situation.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 11 1942

Await Springfield Decision On Boston Symphony Ban

BOSTON, Aug. 11 (UP)—Mgr. George Judd today reserved comment on a published report the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play in the Municipal Auditorium at Springfield next Winter despite the threat of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. L., to blacklist the auditorium if the non-union orchestra plays there.

An unofficial spokesman for the orchestra pointed to the fact it had been booked for the Springfield concerts and added "Any further statement regarding the controversy must come from Springfield."

At Springfield, indications were that the City Property Committee, over Petrillo's objections, would grant the Community Concerts Association permission to have the Boston Symphony play in the Auditorium.

"The Municipal Auditorium is a public hall, built, paid for and maintained by the citizens of Springfield for public entertainment." said Chairman William S. Lowe of the committee. "We are obliged to rent the Auditorium to any organization so long as it is not subversive or considered an enemy of the United States."

The committee's decision is expected in a few days.

Only non-union symphony orchestra in the United States, the Boston group retains that status because its members, reputedly the highest paid in the country, fear unionization might bring lower salaries.

Loss of the Springfield engagement would work no hardship on the orchestra, the spokesman said, since the Boston Symphony is kept busy with a home calendar of 24 Friday afternoon concerts, 24 Saturday night concerts, 60 to 65 "Pop" concerts, and other programs. The orchestra goes on tours not for the money, but merely for prestige, the spokesman said.

The spokesman described as groundless the legend that Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, who founded the orchestra 61 years ago, left an endowment which the orchestra would lose if it unionized.

PASTE OVER

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1942

Princess Juliana Hears Concert at Tanglewood

Royal Party Attends Third Concert Presented by Student Orchestra Under Koussevitzky; Duo-Pianists Score

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Aug. 8.—Royalty was in attendance at Tanglewood tonight. Her Royal Highness, Princess Juliana of The Netherlands was present. In the royal box were the following guests: Madame Rouell (lady in waiting), Mr. and Mrs. Van Tets, Madame Van Walsen, Madame Maryla Lednicka, Mr. Fritze, Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes, Miss Miriam K. Oliver and Miss Taylor of Ottawa.

The dramatic declarations of the Brahms "Symphony, No. 4," filigreed delicacy of Mozart's "E-flat Concerto" for two pianos, and Howard Hanson's "Third Symphony" swept through the "shed" and grounds. It was the third of the symphony concerts presented by the student orchestra of Berkshire Music Center, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. The piano soloists were Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff. There was an attendance of 3500.

Tones Crystal Clear

It is not for the purpose of confirming the unconditional praise we expressed two years ago when these duo-pianists appeared in a Worcester Civic Music concert that we wish to review some of the highlights of their art. That program was almost exclusively devoted to romantic technical extravagances.

Tonight Luboshutz and Nemenoff were confronted with a score of the utmost classical purity, where finesse of phrasing, purity of tone, and exact graduations of volume demanded sharp insight. It is true that the "E-flat Concerto" was written in a period of Mozart's creative life that was not abundantly productive of master works—it is equally true that this concerto does not soar to the high peaks that some of his post-Vienna works do. Nevertheless, under the fingers of these artists it became an episode of magically delicate but crystal-clear tones.

The excellent appraisals of balance were not confined to the pianists. Knowing Koussevitzky's concepts of the classics, one would expect detailed execution, but this reviewer's respect for this youthful orchestra's obedience is ever increasing. The result of tonight's treatment of Mozart was precise dynamic balance. There was pronounced contrast between the more robust first movement, leisurely tender "andante" and the light, frolicsome "rondo." The pianists were accorded hospitable welcome which returned them to the stage many times.

Symphony Opens Program

Howard Hanson's "Third Symphony" opened the program. The harmonic confusions and sometimes aimless wanderings of much that is written today impresses one with the unmistakable academic knowledge of its authors, vast technical shrewdness, and intimate knowledge of the personalities of instruments. But we find ourselves seeking inspirational support for these sounds and we cannot prevent consistent concentration upon structural elements. Howard Hanson said, (in connection with the writing of this symphony)—"a composer should write as he feels." A masterwork need not convey its subject or source of inspiration, but it should inspire. We attribute the absence of any but analytical reaction in no degree to the performances of the orchestra, which was entirely competent.

Although Brahms lived 12 years after completing the "E-Minor Symphony" which was played tonight, it is undoubtedly one of his sovereign orchestral works. Regardless of the degree of fervor with which one worships the music of Brahms, the ineluctable fact remains that much of his early work is far from irreproachable. The modulation of mood from Mozart to Brahms is a defiance. Koussevitzky embarked upon the steady, persistent motion of the first movement with precision. The bold incisive themes (they were not always accurately played by the brasses) which follow were approached with clear rhythmic enunciation, and without the instability or impatience of inexperienced performance. The rather melancholic, but far from pathetic second movement again called attention to the excellence of the wood-wind and string sections. The thematic interplay between these two was posed, particularly in the "triplet-figured" passages. The good-humored "allegro giocoso" was played with decision. The spacious "allegro passionato" was not only brilliant but dazzling.

YORK, PA.
DISPATCH
JUN 20 1942

THE CZAR'S EDICT

Whether the threatened relegation of juke boxes to the junk heap is a good move or a bad thing is beside the point.

There is the much more important question of whether James C. Petrillo, the all-high czar of the American Federation of Musicians, is acting in the public's or Petrillo's interest when he puts forth such an edict as he did in Dallas, Tex., where he told the union's convention that after Aug. 1 union musicians would make no more records for juke boxes.

Petrillo's record indicates that he cares nothing about the public. Petrillo's only interest in life is to see that his musicians get as much money as possible. He shows no interest in music or the enjoyment of music. Petrillo's union forces theaters to hire and pay salaries to musicians who are not needed and who do not play a single note, which is plain racketeering. He blacklisted Serge Koussevitsky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony, because he would not join the union.

All this is very fine for Petrillo. It keeps him in an office to which some power is attached—and he is not so big that he won't "go after" high school bands—and it assures him a very lucrative salary. Yes, it is very fine for Petrillo. But what about the public which has to pay higher prices for theater tickets because of Petrillo. And what about the musicians who are slaves of the union and are steadily losing respect as citizens and as musicians?

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 8 - 1942

BOARD ASKED TO REFUSE HALL FOR BOSTON CONCERT

Councilmen Put in Position of Deciding Union Issue

With two communications now in the hands of the City Property Committee asking that it refuse the Boston Symphony Orchestra the right to play in the Municipal Auditorium, two members of that board this morning, indicated that if the proposed concert is not to take place this fall, but some time early next year, they will decline to act on the request, leaving the issue to be settled by the 1943 board.

Up to Next Board

Alderman William S. Lowe, chairman, and Councilman J. Albert Greenway both expressed the view that if the concert were to be in 1943 then the present board should not be expected to act.

The requests to ban the Boston orchestra came from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner concerts.

The committee decided last night that it would call in Raymond T. King, president of the Community Concerts Association, sponsor of the appearance of the Boston Symphony, for discussion of the situation, before determining what course of action to follow.

Both communications urged that the Boston organization, a non-union body, be barred. The Indianapolis Symphony will not be allowed to play here if the Boston orchestra is allowed to play.

This leaves the City Property Committee, as Chairman Lowe sees the situation, in the position of having to determine whether it shall allow the use of the hall for the Boston players, with the prospect of no entertainments with union musicians in the future.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES
CHAMPAIGN, ILL.
NEWS-GAZETTE
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL & REPORTER
AUG 10 1942

Hub Symphony Date In Wrangle

Springfield Told Union Head Will Blacklist Hall If Group Plays

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Aug. 10 (AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 11 1942

SYMPHONY PATRONS APPREHENSIVE HERE

Fear Petrillo May "Blacklist" Theatre Where Orchestra Will Play

Patrons of the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra which is scheduled to play five concerts here starting Oct. 20, were apprehensive last night after reported threats by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to "blacklist" the Springfield, Mass., Municipal Auditorium if the orchestra plays there as scheduled this season. If this threat were carried out, union musicians would be forbidden to play in the Auditorium.

The Springfield concert was "still on the books" last night. The Providence concerts are scheduled for Oct. 20, Nov. 24, Jan. 19, Feb. 16 and April 6, at the Metropolitan Theatre.

Raymond G. Williams, assistant secretary-treasurer of the Music Association of Providence, which leases the Metropolitan Theatre for the concerts, said yesterday that the leases already had been signed. He said he preferred not to comment on the Springfield situation.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 11 1942

Await Springfield Decision On Boston Symphony Ban

BOSTON, Aug. 11 (UP)—Mgr. George Judd today reserved comment on a published report the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play in the Municipal Auditorium at Springfield next Winter despite the threat of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. L., to blacklist the auditorium if the non-union orchestra plays there.

An unofficial spokesman for the orchestra pointed to the fact it had been booked for the Springfield concerts and added "Any further statement regarding the controversy must come from Springfield."

At Springfield, indications were that the City Property Committee, over Petrillo's objections, would grant the Community Concerts Association permission to have the Boston Symphony play in the Auditorium.

"The Municipal Auditorium is a public hall, built, paid for and maintained by the citizens of Springfield for public entertainment." said Chairman William S. Lowe of the committee. "We are obliged to rent the Auditorium to any organization so long as it is not subversive or considered an enemy of the United States."

The committee's decision is expected in a few days.

Only non-union symphony orchestra in the United States, the Boston group retains that status because its members, reputedly the highest paid in the country, fear unionization might bring lower salaries.

Loss of the Springfield engagement would work no hardship on the orchestra, the spokesman said, since the Boston Symphony is kept busy with a home calendar of 24 Friday afternoon concerts, 24 Saturday night concerts, 60 to 65 "Pop" concerts, and other programs. The orchestra goes on tours not for the money, but merely for prestige, the spokesman said.

The spokesman described as groundless the legend that Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, who founded the orchestra 61 years ago, left an endowment which the orchestra would lose if it unionized.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

PASTE OVER

INFORMATION OBSCURED

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of in- ction proceedings against mes C. Petrillo and the mu- ians' union, the United ates department of justice sumes its efforts to apply e law to certain policies and actices of organized labor. These efforts, it will be remem- red, were suspended, or anyhow ferred, by a supreme court deci- on restricting the application of e federal anti-trust laws to the tivities of unions and by the torney general's publicity re- udiating some months ago the ews on these matters of Thur- an Arnold, the assistant attorney eneral in charge of the depart- nent's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Fighting Men Feared

M.

S

URS

ast 10th

To Blacklist Hall If Symphony Plays

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 9 (A. P.).—A threat of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians' (A.F.L), to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known today.

The Boston Orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The City Property Committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

PHILA. ORCHESTRA LISTED

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner, of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall was blacklisted.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

PASTE OVER

INFORMATION OBSCURED

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of in- ction proceedings against mes C. Petrillo and the mu- ians' union, the United ates department of justice sumes its efforts to apply e law to certain policies and actices of organized labor. These efforts, it will be remem- red, were suspended, or anyhow ferred, by a supreme court deci- on restricting the application of e federal anti-trust laws to the ctivities of unions and by the ttorney general's publicity re- udiating some months ago the iews on these matters of Thur- an Arnold, the assistant attorney eneral in charge of the depart- nent's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Fighting Men Fearec

Measures L

So give your g trusted you — Good Neighb
—that he wa
you do, and k

But he's got a learn and und he's suffering

When diffic iron them ou good job, coo laying prices, good work is

Springfield Hall

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 9 (AP)—A threat of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known today.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the Auditorium next Winter. The city property committee will decide within a week on any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, Property Board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner, of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall was blacklisted.

The Community Concert Association said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

PASTE OVER

INFORMATION OBSCURED

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER

Fighting Men Feared

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHU-SETTS.
WORCESTER, SS. PROBATE COURT
To all persons interested in the estate of Eunice P. Huntley, late o Charlton, in said county, deceased.
petition has been presented to sai court, praying that Laura M. Hodg ersey of Spencer, in said county, o some other suitable person be ap pointed administrator of said estate
If you desire to object thereto you or your attorney should file a writte appearance in said court at Worcest ter before ten o'clock in the forenoon on the eighteenth day of August, 1942 witness, HARRY H. ATWOOD, Es quire, first judge of said court, thi thirty-first day of July, in the year one thousand nine hundred and forty two. F. JOSEPH DONOHUE, Register.
Aug. 7-10-17.

good work is els teamed onal respon-ating prices,

Ruling Awaited By Springfield

City Committee To Rule As Union Threatens Blacklist Proceedings

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10—(AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentativedy for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

PASTE OVER

INFORMATION OBSCURED

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
...ESTER, N. H.
...EADER
...CESTER, MASS.
...GAZETTE
...BORO, VT.
...RMER
...GELES, CALIF.
...MES
..., N. Y.
...NION
...N, O.
...R, N.Y.
...HRONICLE
...CONN.
...N. Y.
...RNAL
...Y.
...NEWS
...Y.
...S.

...Orchestra Here May Be Booked In Union Fight

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 9 —The Philadelphia Orchestra will appear here in the Municipal Auditorium next winter if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra, originally booked, is barred, it was announced today.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the Boston orchestra appeared.

The city property committee will decide within a week what action to take.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said engagement of the Philadelphia Orchestra was tentative.

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

PASTE OVER

INFORMATION OBSCURED

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
...ESTER, N. H.
...EADER
...CESTER, MASS.
...GAZETTE
...BORO, VT.
...RMER
...ELES, CALIF.
...MES
..., N. Y.
...NION
...N, O.
...R, N.Y.
...HRONICLE
...CONN.
...N. Y.
...RNAL
...Y.
...NEWS

Fighting Men Feared
...ACASSUL CA
...ls teamed
good work is
...onal respon-
...ing Prices
...t. and Mrs.
...ue. 13.
Corporal Robert Finan, son of ...springfield, Mass., on Thursday,
...ast Guard and will report at
...reet has enlisted in the U. S.
...rs. Thomas J. Finan of Maple
Paul Finan, son of Mr. and ...arnival.
...eir part in the Memorial Fund

...he Goal of C...

...threat of James C. Petrillo, national president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) to blacklist the Springfield municipal auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony orchestra appeared there was made known today.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner, of the Wagner Concert foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall was blacklisted.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

[110]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Petrillo Fights Hub Symphony Orchestra

SRINGFIELD, Aug. 10.—(AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, Property Board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the Auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

Union musicians will thereafter be allowed to appear on the stage. The orchestra, however, isn't scheduled to appear here until next spring and no action will be taken by the present board which might be influenced by the union warning.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

PETRILLO THREAT

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield Municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

the cross fire of not only the union but of the Wagner and community concerts sponsors.

If the Boston orchestra plays at the Auditorium, the union has warned, no union musicians will thereafter be allowed to appear on the stage. The orchestra, however, isn't scheduled to appear here until next spring and no action will be taken by the present board which might be influenced by the union warning.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Des Moines, IA.

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

ROW ATTRACTING WIDE ATTENTION

New York Newspaper Points Out Hot Spot Facing Property Board

The incipient row between union musicians, the Community Concerts Association and the City Property Committee over the use of the Municipal Auditorium by the Boston Symphony Orchestra reached national attention today when the New York Times published a page one story about the threat of the union to blacklist the Auditorium.

The article recites the threat by the musicians to blacklist the auditorium if the Boston orchestra plays here and reviews the requests of other musical organizations to the property board to refuse use of the auditorium to the nonunion orchestra. It further points out the spot in which the property board has been put as it sits in the cross fire of not only the union but of the Wagner and community concerts sponsors.

If the Boston orchestra plays at the Auditorium, the union has warned, no union musicians will thereafter be allowed to appear on the stage. The orchestra, however, isn't scheduled to appear here until next spring and no action will be taken by the present board which might be influenced by the union warning.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Property Committee is faced with making a decision on whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in Springfield Municipal Auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

AFL President Threatened Action If Boston Symphony Plays.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the aduditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

American air forces.

"American air forces and RAF have worked in such full operation that we are proceed ahead of actual schedule."

Warning by Harris Recalled

Spaatz said "it is gratifying to members of the American forces to realize how helpful British ally has been."

His statement recalled that Marshal Sir Arthur T. Harris, commander of British bombardm forces, had warned Germany cently that the American British air forces would "scou

Food Too Good

The first time they asked for the "Gable" song I was stumped. It had been a long time since I had sung it, but after ad-libbing the lyrics a few times, the original ones came back to me. The shows were all at night and my days were spent touring the camp. There wasn't a spot I missed seeing from the kitchen to the rifle range.

Mealtimes were fun. The only bad part was that the food was so good I gained eight pounds. We ate in the mess hall with all the boys and a steady diet of steak and potatoes, fried chicken and pie worked hardship on the brand new figure I had worked so hard to acquire. Now I understand why all the boys come home on furlough looking so strong and healthy.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Through this corn field near the first half-mile sections of the 550-mile, 24-inch line is a war-... the pipeline is Burt E. Hull, ... the eastern seaboard's fuel oil ... British air forces would "scou... cently that the American ...

Food Too Good

The first time they asked for the "Gable" song I was stumped. It had been a long time since I had sung it. But after ad-libbing the lyrics a few times, the original ones came back to me. The shows were all at night and my days were spent touring the camp. There wasn't a spot I missed seeing from the kitchen to the rifle range.

Mealtimes were fun. The only bad part was that the food was so good I gained eight pounds. We ate in the mess hall with all the boys and a steady diet of steak and potatoes, fried chicken and pie worked hardship on the brand new figure I had worked so hard to acquire. Now I understand why all the boys come home on furlough looking so strong and healthy.

Springfield Hall Faces Music Union Issue

Springfield, Mass.—(AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Through this corn field near the first half-mile sections of the 550-mile, 24-inch line is a war-time pipeline for Burt E. Hull, the eastern seaboard's fuel oil ... British air forces would "scou ... cently that the American ...

Food Too Good

The first time they asked for the "Gable" song I was stumped. It had been a long time since I had sung it, but after ad-libbing the lyrics a few times, the original ones came back to me. The shows were all at night and my days were spent touring the camp. There wasn't a spot I missed seeing from the kitchen to the rifle range.

Meantimes were fun. The only bad part was that the food was so good I gained eight pounds. We ate in the mess hall with all the boys and a steady diet of steak and potatoes, fried chicken and pie worked hardship on the brand new figure I had worked so hard to acquire. Now I understand why all the boys come home on furlough looking so strong and "healthy." It's that French ...

...ngfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—The City Property Committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Through this corn field near the first half-mile sections of the 550-mile, 24-inch line is a war the eastern seaboard's fuel oil ...the pipeline is Burt E. Hull. ...cently that the American British air forces would "scou

Food Too Good

The first time they asked for the "Gable" song I was stumped. It had ...out after ad-libbing the lyrics a few ...been a long time since I had sung it. ...times, the original ones came back ...and my days were spent touring the ...to me. The shows were all at night ...camp. There wasn't a spot I missed ...seeing from the kitchen to the rifle ...range.

Mealtimes were fun. The only bad part was that the food was so good I gained eight pounds. We ate in the mess hall with ...

Battle Over Music

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10.—(AP)—The City Property Committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphoney, said it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date. not show.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CONCERT DATE BRINGS THREAT

Springfield, Mass.—(AP)—A threat of James C. Petrillo, national president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), to blacklist the Springfield Municipal auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there, was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

[110]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10. —(AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

Leo Wolman.

The institution of in-on proceedings against s C. Petrillo and the mu-ns' union, the United tes department of justice esumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Through this corn field near the first half-mile sections of the 550-mile, 24-inch line is a war the eastern seaboard's fuel oil ... the pipeline is Burt E. Hull, ... cently that the American ... British air forces would "scou ... Food Too Good

The first time they asked for the "Gable" song I was stumped. It had been a long time since I had sung it, but after ad-libbing the lyrics a few times, the original ones came back all at night

Smooth fit Woven fibre
Auto S
Extra heavy lacquered fibre in plaid-like design
Trimmed with blue or ... heavy duck cloth weaved ... matching leatherette c...

Speaking over the Columbia Broadcasting System, President Quezon said "My Filipino country men have fought beside your boys. He did not, however, state whether or not he believed any American troops to be participating in the ... said yes ... con...

Boston Symphony orchestra appeared there was made known today.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chaidman ,said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner, of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall was blacklisted.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Sampruf e
"Cameo" Si
$0.25
ALBANY'S COR
WHITNEY'S SE

Boston Orchestra Hit Anew by Union

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) Aug. 9. (AP)—A threat of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.,) to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known today.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter.

were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

tentatively the Philadelphia orchestra for the same date.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Seamprufe

"Cameo" Sl

$2.25

comes over you with a raving for color. Not

Czar Petrillo Says It Can't Play in Springfield, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

tentatively the Philadelphia orchestra for the same date.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

Un Use of Hall

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 10 (AP) —The City Property Committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play next Winter in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, Property Board chairman, said two other groups had informed him union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had engaged tentatively the Philadelphia Orchestra for the same date.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

---

ident of Worcester Polytechnic n route to Bermuda for a two H. Goddard, secretary of the its greetings to the California tates in the Olympic games at n Bears have won their trial ase tell boys that Worcester is r races this week. We enjoyed n our city so much that we feel Your success."

members of the New York Stock Exchange? R. M. B.

May Blacklist Hall If Boston Symphony Plays

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10—(A.P.)—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston symphony orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said two other groups had informed him their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston symphony, said it had engaged the Philadelphia orchestra tentatively for the same date.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

members of the New York Stock Exchange? R. W. B.

Threat Made

Move on Springfield Auditorium Told

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP)—A threat of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), to blacklist the Springfield municipal auditorium if the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appeared there was made known today.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in th auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours, with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the voluminous writings on organized labor in this country.

The moves against Mr. Petrillo and his union, con-

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor movement of this country, when it sought and obtained the great prize of compulsory unionism, surrendered much of that freedom of action which traditional, voluntary trade unionism had assured them.

ATTA BOY, SKIPPER! HE'S GONNA SURFACE AND TRY TO SLIP OUT members of the New York Stock Exchange? R. ... success.

—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium next winter. James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), has said he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears.

For the cold dishes to round out the meal, arrange sliced cheese in the center of a large platter and surround with a variety of cold cuts or left over cold meat. Around these on the outside edge of the platter arrange in lettuce cups peeled tomatoes which have been stuffed with cucumber and cabbage slaw. Serve enriched or whole wheat bread as accompani-noodle soup mix and cook seven minutes.

* * *

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS NEWS

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. UNION

WASHINGTON, D. C. TIMES HERALD

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES

MEMPHIS, TENN. COMMERCIAL APPEAL

NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N. Y. DAILY WORKER

NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES

AUG 12 1942

DEFIES PETRILLO BAN

Springfield Refuses to Drop Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP)—A test case of the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield Property Committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a nonunion group, to play at the Municipal Auditorium.

The Wagner Concerts and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra have notified the Springfield Concerts Association that they would not appear if the Boston Symphony Orchestra played there. The association asked the property committee to decide whether the Boston Orchestra should be banned.

Despite the threat of "blacklisting," it was decided last night that the auditorium is open to any organization "unless it is involved in subversive activities."

CONCORD, N. H. MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO. POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

The movement of Petrillo and ... sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the ... uminous writi... labor in this c...

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor move... country, when it ... stained the great ... sory unionism, sur... of that freedom of ... litional, voluntary ... ad assured them.

Supreme Court Justice J. Sidney Bernstein dismissed yesterday

'Overpaying' Executives Stockholder Sued Directors for numbers of experienced ... ers who have migrated to war-production centers or entered the armed forces. Moreover, in the case of the supplementary agricultural labor supply—farm women and children, together with students and other persons from near-by towns—a much larger proportion is being utilized on a full-time basis this Summer."

LOSES SPERRY PAY SUIT

Test Petrillo Ban

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 11 (UP).—A test case of the powers of James Petrillo, head of the Musicians Union, was indicated today as the result of the Springfield property committee's decision to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play at the Municipal Auditorium. Commitments because that was the "way it did business."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

The mov[illegible] Petrillo and [illegible] sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, th.y constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by the union) by Arthur Krock as being practiced in the closed-shop, check-off plants of the Ford Motor Co., and in a multitude of rules and regulations of the same kind in other industries, of which, unluckily, there are not even the beginnings of an adequate record in the [illegible] uminous writi[illegible] labor in this c[illegible]

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

It is not to be expected that the leaders of organized labor will relish these developments.

Even in war time they protest the fixing of wages and restrictions of their right to continue to engage in collective bargaining over wages. But the labor move- [illegible] country, when it [illegible] stained the great [illegible] sory unionism, sur- [illegible] of that freedom of [illegible] ditional, voluntary [illegible] had assured them.

Supreme Court Justice J. Sidney Bernstein dismissed yesterday

Stockholder Sued Directors for 'Overpaying' Executives

LOSES SPERRY PAY SUIT

and once agreed to by the manage[illegible]

[illegible] numbers of experienced [illegible] ers who have migrated to war-production centers or entered the armed forces. Moreover, in the case of the supplementary agricultural labor supply—farm women and children, together with students and other persons from near-by towns—a much larger proportion is being utilized on a full-time basis this Summer."

[illegible] wood, Lenox, Mass., when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Mrs. Owen Johnson is chairman of the box committee.

to blacklist the auditorium if the nonunion Boston Symphony plays there.

A spokesman for the symphony said the orchestra would keep its commitments because that was the "way it did business."

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS

Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary xercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by t Arthur Krock as be in the closed-sho plants of the Ford M in a multitude of ru lations of the same industries, of whic there are not even t of an adequate reco uminous writings labor in this country

The moves a Petrillo and his

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

ted that the bor will rel- s. they protest and restric- s continue to bargaining labor move- ry, when it the great nionism, sur- t freedom of al, voluntary sured them.

LOSES SPERRY PAY SUIT

Stockholder Sued Directors for 'Overpaying' Executives

Supreme Court Justice J. Sidney Bernstein dismissed yesterday and once agreed to by the manage numbers of experienced [illegible] ers who have migrated to war-production centers or entered the armed forces. Moreover, in the case of the supplementary agricultural labor supply—farm women and children, together with students and other persons from near-by towns—a much larger proportion is being utilized on a full-time basis this Summer."

PETRILLO RECEIVES SNUB

Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Defy Czar of Musicians

BOSTON, Aug. 11.—(INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra refused Tuesday to alter its plans in appearing at Municipal Auditorium in Springfield, despite threats of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the auditorium if the nonunion Boston Symphony plays there.

A spokesman for the symphony said the orchestra would keep its commitments because that was the "way it did business."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls nd 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitor hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Rules.

They are found in the so-called feather bed rules of the railroad unions, the forced employment of unnecessary help by the teamsters, the embargoes on materials and products by the organized building trades, the more general kind of slowdown reported (and not yet denied by t Arthur Krock as be in the closed-sho plants of the Ford I in a multitude of r lations of the same industries, of whic there are not even of an adequate reco uminous writings labor in this country

The moves a Petrillo and his

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and exacting process. In its course, the makers of public policy will need to decide how closely the way unions manage their internal affairs affects the public interest, weigh the equity and soundness of alternative levels of wages, and, more difficult still, determine when the gains from restricting production exceed the losses.

ted that the bor will rel- s.

they protest and restric- s continue to bargaining labor move- ry, when it the great nionism, sur- t freedom of al, voluntary sured them.

Bernstein dismissed yesterday

Supreme Court Justice J. Sidney

Stockholder Sued Directors for 'Overpaying' Executives

LOSES SPERRY PAY SUIT

THE WAR DEPARTMENT ques- tioned truth of Army press agent stories telling of discovery and obliteration of ground marker intended to guide enemy bomber to vital United States ers who have migrated to war-pro- duction centers or entered the armed forces. Moreover, in the case of the supplementary agricultural labor supply—farm women and children, together with students and other persons from near-by towns—a much larger proportion is being utilized on a full-time basis this Summer."

THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMIN- istration reported that war pro- duction demands had increased average American work week by one hour in the past year.

Boston — (INS) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra refused today to alter its plans in appearing at Municipal Auditorium in Springfield, despite threats of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony plays there.

A spokesman for the Symphony said the orchestra would keep its commitments because that was the "way it did business."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief or reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Ru

They are found in th feather bed rules of t unions, the forced emp unnecessary help by sters, the embargoes o and products by the building trades, the m kind of slowdown rep not yet denied by the Arthur Krock as bein in the closed-shop, plants of the Ford Mo in a multitude of rul lations of the same industries, of which there are not even th of an adequate reco uminous writings labor in this country

The moves ag
Petrillo and his

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and ourse, the will need s the way ternal af-interest, sindness of ages, and, determine restricting osses.

ed that the or will rel-hey protest and restriccontinue to bargaining labor move-y, when it
the great ionism, sur-
freedom of l, voluntary sured them.

LOSES SPERRY PAY SUIT

Stockholder Sued Directors for 'Overpaying' Executives

Supreme Court Justice J. Sidney Bernstein dismissed yesterday intended to guide enemy bombers to vital Timken Steel plants and production centers or entered the armed forces. Moreover, in the case of the supplementary agricultural labor supply—farm women and children, together with students and other persons from near-by towns—a much larger proportion is being utilized on a full-time basis this Summer."

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Defies Petrillo Order

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 11.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra refused today to alter its plans in appearing at municipal auditorium in Springfield, despite threats of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to blackout the auditorium if the nonunion Boston Symphony plays there.

Commitments because that was the "way it did business."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS Des Moines, IA.

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Aug. 2, '42 Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

—

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase available employment, and in this instance, where supply is virtually monopolized, to deprive the public and industry of customary and desirable services.

These features of collective bargaining, as it is practiced by the musicians' union, are by no means peculiar to that trade or that union.

Feather Bed Ru

They are found in th feather bed rules of t unions, the forced emp unnecessary help by sters, the embargoes o and products by the building trades, the m kind of slowdown rep not yet denied by the Arthur Krock as bein in the closed-shop, plants of the Ford Mo in a multitude of rul lations of the same industries, of which there are not even th of an adequate reco uminous writings labor in this country

The moves ag Petrillo and his

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities must now come to grips with the complex and subtle problems of labor relations which their policies engendered.

This is no simple task to be discharged by crude and hasty amendments of existing statutes. It is on the contrary a lengthy and ourse, the s will need s the way ternal af-

g interest, sindness of ages, and, determine restricting osses.
ed that the or will rell ney protest nd restriccontinue to bargaining abor move-y, when it
the great ionism, sur-freedom of al, voluntary sured them.

Supreme Court Justice J. Sidney Bernstein dismissed yesterday

LOSES SPERRY PAY SUIT

Stockholder Sued Directors for 'Overpaying' Executives

towns—a much larger proportion is being utilized on a full-time basis this Summer."

and other persons from near-by children, together with students labor supply—farm women and of the supplementary agricultural armed forces. Moreover, in the case induction centers or entered the intended to guide enemy bombers

Lee and O'Mahoney both claimed that there are ample raw materials available in this country

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

By Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Aug. 11 (I.N.S.)—The Boston symphony orchestra refused to alter its plan in appearing at municipal auditorium today in Springfield, despite threats of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the auditorium if the non-union Boston symphony plays there.

A spokesman for the symphony said the orchestra would keep its commitments because that was the "way it did business."

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

PASTE OVER

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

AUG 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARNING WEIGHED

Petrillo Threatens Blacklist for Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10 (A. P.).—The city property committee is expected to decide within a week whether the already engaged non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play in the Springfield municipal auditorium next winter.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), has said that he will blacklist the hall if the non-union organization appears. Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that two other groups had informed him that their union musicians would not fill engagements in the auditorium if it were so listed.

The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said that it had engaged the Philadelphia Orchestra tentatively for the same date.

CITES MUSICIANS

Task of Controlling Labor Being Studied

Des Moines, IA.

Aug. 2, '42

Register

This is the fifth of a series of articles on labor problems by Leo Wolman. Another article will be in next Sunday's Register. Mr. Wolman was for 11 years research director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and is today a professor of economics at Columbia university. He has written many books and articles on labor problems.

By Leo Wolman.

With the institution of injunction proceedings against James C. Petrillo and the musicians' union, the United States department of justice resumes its efforts to apply the law to certain policies and practices of organized labor.

These efforts, it will be remembered, were suspended, or anyhow deferred, by a supreme court decision restricting the application of the federal anti-trust laws to the activities of unions and by the attorney general's publicity repudiating some months ago the views on these matters of Thurman Arnold, the assistant attorney general in charge of the department's anti-trust division.

Stirred Into Action.

Now, an apparently extreme and absurd form of restriction, ordered by the national president of the musicians' union, has once more stirred the government's lawyers into action. The musicians' prohibitions run the whole gamut from the chronic bans on concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to the latest interdict involving the cancellation by the National Broadcasting Co. of the Grant Park concerts in Chicago.

Canceling this broadcast is the reply to an order by the musicians forbidding NBC to feed the broadcast to station KSTP, the NBC outlet in the St. Paul-Minneapolis area. And the purpose of the order itself is to force station KSTP to yield to the demand of the St. Paul-Minneapolis local of the musicians' union that a year's work be guaranteed to any member employed for a period of 30 days.

FCC Investigation.

On all fours with these measures stands, also, the cancellation of the amateur broadcast of the National High School orchestra at Interlochen, Mich., which the federal communications commission has taken steps to investigate.

The particular restriction which the justice department is at the moment seeking to enjoin concerns still another type of prohibition.

In this case the union has ordered its members to cease making transcriptions and recordings for radio and other non-private use, and the government is undertaking to prevent the order from being enforced.

The government's argument traverses familiar ground. The action in question is a species of "made-work" policy. As such it imposes costly burdens on the public and industry, hinders mechanical improvements, and limits demand. It might well be added that enforcing restrictions of this kind is generally a losing game.

sequently, derive their importance from the problems they foreshadow as the industry of the United States becomes more thoroughly unionized and the labor movement progressively more powerful.

As experience with strong trade unionism in Europe, as well as in the United States, shows, the practice of restriction is an evolutionary process. It begins as an attack on a real or fancied evil, such as sweating in the clothing industry, or the speedup in automobiles, or the stretch-out in in textiles.

The aim is protection against too much, or too fast, or too arduous work. But, in time, the few simple regulations which a new system of collective bargaining begins with multiply, extend to more and more matters, become harder to revise or remove, and appear, finally, to exist for their own sake, more as tokens of power than as instruments of relief o reform.

Burden on Prosperity.

When this stage is reached, as it often is, they constitute an intolerable burden on the prosperity of both industry and labor and defeat the purposes for which a sound system of labor relations is assumed to exist.

Where, also, collective bargaining has reached this advanced stage, equality of bargaining power, which is the real goal of all recent legislation and court decisions governing the legal position of unions, becomes a myth.

For the customary checks on the arbitrary exercise of power cease in time to exist. The non-union plant or non-union region, which at the worst served the purpose of keeping union demands within competitive bounds, just as the threat of unionization kept standards in the non-union shops higher than they might otherwise have been, has no place or function in a policy which aims at universal organization and national agreements between organized employers and organized labor.

The uneconomic and burdensome practices that arise under these conditions are either accepted by acquiescent managers of industry, who seek to adapt themselves to them or even enter into collusive agreement with a union, or, whenever they directly and obviously touch the public interest, an aroused public opinion forces them upon the government's attention and presses for relief.

Government Function.

Fixing the standards of union conduct thus gradually becomes a function and responsibility of the government. It is a difficult and not altogether welcome responsibility. But the necessity for it is a natural enough consequence of the efforts of the government during these last years to set the American labor movement on its feet, augment its numbers and power, and force the bulk of industry to deal with it.

At the price of some benefit to a small, and under the circumstances shrinking, class of employes, such limitations and prohibitions tend to reduce and not to increase ployment, and where supply is opolized, to dep and industry of desirable service

These features gaining, as it is musicians' union, peculiar to that union.

Feather B

They are found feather bed rules unions, the force unnecessary help sters, the embarg and products by building trades, kind of slowdow not yet denied b Arthur Krock as in the closed-s plants of the For in a multitude of lations of the sa industries, of w there are not eve of an adequate r uminous writings labor in this cou

The moves Petrillo and h

Having bestowed unexampled power on what are essentially private organizations, public authorities me to grips sex and subtle bor relations plicies engenple task to be ide and hasty isting statutes. y a lengthy and n its course, the policy will need osely the way eir internal af- public interest, d soundness of of wages, and, ill, determine om restricting the losses. pected that the l labor will rel- ents. e they protest s and restric- to continue to e bargaining e labor move- ntry, when it ed the great unionism, sur- at freedom of nal, voluntary assured them.

LOSES SPERRY PAY SUIT

Stockholder Sued Directors for 'Overpaying' Executives

Supreme Court Justice J. Sidney Bernstein dismissed yesterday

Buy W a

TO DEFY PETRILLO BAN

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (INS). — The Boston Symphony orchestra refused today to alter its plans in appearing at Municipal auditorium in Springfield, despite threats of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphoy plays there.

A spokesman for the symphony said the orchestra would keep its commitments because that was the "way it did business."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

AUG 14 1942

Smith College May Not Have Music

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP) —Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 10 1942

PETRILLO EXTENDS FIGHT AGAINST BOSTON SYMPHONY

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP).—A threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFL American Federation of Musicians, to blacklist the Springfield Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared there was made known yesterday.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play in the auditorium next winter. The city property committee will decide within a week whether to take any action.

Alderman William S. Lowe, property board chairman, said that he had received communications from Howard Harrington, business agent of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and from Charles L. Wagner of the Wagner Concert Foundation, saying that union musicians managed by them would be unable to appear if the hall were blacklisted. The Community Concert Association, which booked the Boston Symphony, said it had tentatively engaged the Philadelphia orchestra in case the Boston group could not show.

PASTE OVER

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

WESTERLY, R. I.
SUN

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS

AUG 14 1942

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
ADVANCE

LEBANON, PA.
NEWS

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

WATERVILLE, ME.
SENTINEL

YORK, PA.
GAZETTE & DAILY

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

AUG 14 1942

Smith College Ordered On Musicians' Blacklist

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (INS).—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians put Smith College on the blacklist today because the non-union Boston symphony has been scheduled to give a series of concerts.

The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by Naval officers in charge of the training program of the WAVES, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 Navy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

If the Boston symphony appears at the college all union artists and orchestras will be barred from giving performances.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

HARRISBURG, PA.
NEWS

LIMA, OHIO
NEWS

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SHARON, PA.
HERALD

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

BANGOR, ME.
NEWS

CANTON, OHIO REPOSITORY

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE

BARRE, VT.
TIMES

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 14 1942

Smith College Blacklisted by Musicians' Union

Because Boston Symphony Is to Play In Concert There

NORTHAMPTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—Smith College, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) because the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appears on its concert series, a Federation official announced today.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a Spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith College officials declined comment.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 14 1942

SMITH COLLEGE PLACED ON A. F. M. BLACKLIST

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP) Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) because the non-union Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official announced today.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

AUG 14 1942

Petrillo Drums Up More Music Trouble

'Dictator' Threatens to Blacklist Smith College If Non-Union Boston Symphony Plays There

By The United Press

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the WAVES, unless a scheduled concert is cancelled.

College officials declined comment on Petrillo's threat which would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear at John M. Greene Hall to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy Auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston Symphony Orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tours of the country's only non-union symphony organization.

Petrillo recently threatened the Springfield Auditorium with blacklisting if an appearance of the orchestra there was not cancelled. Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play at Springfield in February and at Smith College in March when it goes on tour after the regular symphony season in Boston.

HE DIDN'T ASK AFL musicians union for permission so Local 198 of the American Federation of Musicians fined Orchestra Leader Don Mario $500 for joining a crowd of 20,000 at a Providence, R. I., patriotic rally in singing The Star Spangled Banner. Mario said he sang of "the land of the free" as a member of the mayor's committee and not as an entertainer.

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 14 1942

Union Ban Seen Affecting Plans For Wave Units

NORTMAMPTON, Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith college girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without schedultd concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

AUG 14 1942

COLLEGE IS BLACKLISTED

Musicians' Union Condemns Smith For Billing Boston Symphony

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Smith College, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), because the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appears on its concert series, a Federation official announced Thursday.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton Local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a Spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith College officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formerly notified of the blacklisting.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS

AUG 1 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (INS).—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians put Smith college on the blacklist today because the non-union Boston symphony has been scheduled to give a series of concerts.

The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by naval officers in charge of the training program of the waves, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 navy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

If the Boston symphony appears at the college all union artists and orchestras will be barred from giving performances. Among union member musicians who are barred are Jascha Heifetz, Elsie Houston, Brazilian soprano; the dual piano performers, Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson; the Rochester Philharmonic and the Cleveland symphony orchestras.

HAYWARD, CALIF.
REVIEW

AUG 13 1942

Ramblings Record

By MICHAEL LEVIN

BY A peculiar quirk, the Boston Symphony, which hasn't recorded at all for the past year, may soon be doing almost all the classical disc-cutting in the country. Last year, Victor (who holds their contract) was warned by the AFM to cease recording the symphony since it is a non-union organization. They complied, and with the exception of releases recorded before that date, it hasn't been heard from since.

Now, however, with all recording for union musicians banned by order of the union, it is highly probable that the Boston Symphony will be called on to fill in the musical breach. RCA-Victor won't do the recording, since Prexy Petrillo of the AFM would undoubtedly blacklist immediately any firm which used a non-union band, and would refuse them permission to use AFM-ers when the present dispute is settled. What may happen is that the orchestra's contract be farmed out to an "independent" record firm, organized solely for the purpose of recording the Boston unit.

* * *

This new Irving Berlin picture is certainly getting a big play from the record-makers. Almost all of them have planned many sides of the 13-tune score of "Holiday Inn," with Decca heading the list with an album by Bing Crosby, Fred Astaire, Bob Crosby's band, John Scott Trotter's orchestra, and the Ken Darby singers.

* * *

Best of the recent discs by new bands is "Trains in the Night" and "Mad About Him, Sad Without Him, How Can I Be Glad Without Him Blues" as done by the Jerry Wald band on their first recording date.

* * *

Best of the week: Glenn Miller's "Long Tail Mama" walks off with the swing award — the first he's gotten in a long while. It's a far more sprightly tune, with better rhythm and solos than the Miller band has come up with of late. . . . Vocal: "He's My Guy," a pretty one by Tommy Dorsey, with his new string section and Jo Stafford's simple by lyric vocalings showing to good effect. . . . Novelty: "The Wolf Song," complete with howls and advice to worried girls. Cutting by Mitchell Ayres' band.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

AUG 16 1942

U. S. Surveys Radio Stations In New Move Against Petrillo

Washington Bureau of The Chicago Sun.

Washington, Aug. 15.—The government took another step today in its fight against James C. Petrillo, Chicago music union leader.

The Federal Communications Commission mailed questionnaires to all standard broadcast stations to ascertain the use of recordings, electrical transcriptions and musicians in broadcasts. Stations were requested to mail the replies in five days.

Results of the FCC survey will be used by the Justice Department in its suit at Chicago against the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) under the Sherman anti-trust act, it was reported.

FCC has received many protests following the recent cancellation of the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., and the order by Petrillo, A. F. M. president, commanding his members to desist from making recordings or electrical transcriptions after Aug. 1.

Other complaints to FCC which prompted the issuance of the questionnaire are the alleged failure or refusal of radio stations to employ Negro musicians in their studio orchestras, and the action of A. F. M. in requiring that stations be refused some or all network musical programs.

Orchestra Defies Petrillo.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 15.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo. The city property committee voted last night that it lacked authority to bar any group fro the hall.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

AUG 16 1942

Smith College Placed On Petrillo's Blacklist

NORTHAMPTON, MASS., AUG. 15.—(INS).—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians put Smith college on the blacklist today because the non-union Boston symphony has been scheduled to give a series of concerts.

The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by naval officers in charge of the training program of the Waves, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 navy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

If the Boston symphony appears at the college all union artists and [illegible] from giving performances. Among union member musicians who are barred are Jascha Heifetz, Elsie Houston, Brazilian soprano; the dual piano performers, Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson; the Rochester philharmonic and the Cleveland symphony orchestras.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1942

Springfield to Ignore Petrillo Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 14 (AP)—The Springfield City Property Committee stuck to its rental policy tonight in the face of a threat by the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) to blacklist the Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra played in it.

The committee's policy permits use of the hall by any individual or organizaation which pays the rental and guarantees protection of the building and occupants.

The provision went unchanged after President Raymond T. King of the Springfield Community Concert Association told the committee he had received no formal notification that the Musicians' Federation would ban the auditorium to union organizations if the Boston Symphony filled its engagement.

Only threat of blacklisting came by telephone from James C. Petrillo, president of the federation, King said, adding that in the absence of written confirmation his association had no intention of canceling the date.

The association is attempting to rearrange its schedule to bring the Boston orchestra here March 26, instead of the original date of Feb. 9, King reported, to avoid possible embarrassment to union organizations having auditorium dates after Feb. 9. None is scheduled for this season after March 26.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 15 1942

Hub Orchestra May Use Auditorium

The City Property Committee by a 2-1 vote last night favored permitting the Boston Symphony Orchestra use of the Municipal Auditorium despite published reports that James S. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, would put the hall on a black list. William S. Lowe, chairman, and J. Albert Greenaway were for the status quo, but Edgar V. Moquin registered vigorous objection, declaring, "I'm strongly against it. I'm not going to have the citizens of Springfield with no music because the Boston Symphony has come in here."

Raymond T. King, appearing before the committee by invitation, stated that in the more than 10 years he had been president of the Community Concerts Association the Boston Symphony had appeared at least six times in Springfield and was the prime favorite according to subscribers balloting. He told of talking to Edwin H. Lyman, Sr., president of the musicians local union, who informed him that Petrillo was handling the entire situation whereupon King telephoned to the national president at Chicago to ask for a statement of his position.

Petrillo's promise to supply this has not thus far been kept, said King, pointing out that he is to date dependent upon the newspaper stories. Originally set for Feb. 9, the appearance of the Boston Symphony will be changed to March 26, final date of the season, if current negotiations with the organization are successful, King said.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 15 1942

Symphony May Join Union

BOSTON, Aug. 14 (UP).—"The Christian Science Monitor" said today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, long opposed to unionization, has held a conference with the American Federation of Musicians, American Federation of Labor affiliate, and the possibility of "a get together seems in sight." The Boston Symphony, the nation's only major nonunion orchestra and one of the highest-paid groups of musicians in the country, "has been hard pressed by the union," the newspaper said. "An announcement may be put out within a short time," the "Monitor" added. "What it may contain is not, however, forecast."

HERKIMER, N. Y.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1942

Petrillo Continues Drive On Boston Symphony

Northampton, Mass., (UP)—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the Waves, unless a scheduled concert is cancelled.

Petrillo's threat would prevent the appearanceof several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear at John M. Greene hall to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston Symphony Orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tour of the country's only non-union symphony organization.

Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays.

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 14 1942

Musicians Union Blacklists Smith

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1, may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-uinon Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

Smith College Is Blacklisted For Hiring Boston Orchestra

NORTHAMPTON (AP). — Smith College girls and 900 "WAVES" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "WAVES" and that it appeared that the Navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 14 1942

Music Union Ban Hits Waves At Smith College

Northampton, Mass (AP) — Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the Navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS

AUG 15 1942

Boston Symphony Can Play in Hall

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 15 — (UP) — The non-union Boston Symphony orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite the threat of blacklisting by the head of the American Federation of Musicians.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

AUG 14 1942

Czar Petrillo Issues New Blacklist

NORTHAMPTON (Mass.) Aug. 13. (Exclusive)—Smith College, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) because the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official announced today. The president of the union is J. Caesar Petrillo.

[112]

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

WESTERLY, R. I.
SUN

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS

AUG 1 4 1942

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
ADVANCE

LEBANON, PA.
NEWS

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

WATERVILLE, ME.
SENTINEL

YORK, PA.
GAZETTE & DAILY

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

AUG 1 4 1942

Smith College Ordered On Musicians' Blacklist

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (INS).—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians put Smith College on the blacklist today because the non-union Boston symphony has been scheduled to give a series of concerts.

The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by Naval officers in charge of the training program of the WAVES, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 Navy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

If the Boston symphony appears at the college all union artists and orchestras will be barred from giving performances.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

HARRISBURG, PA.
NEWS

LIMA, OHIO
NEWS

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SHARON, PA.
HERALD

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

BANGOR, ME.
NEWS

CANTON, OHIO REPOSITORY

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE

BARRE, VT.
TIMES

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 4 1942

Smith College Blacklisted by Musicians' Union

Because Boston Symphony Is to Play In Concert There

NORTHAMPTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—Smith College, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) because the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appears on its concert series, a Federation official announced today.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a Spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith College officials declined comment.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 4 1942

SMITH COLLEGE PLACED ON A. F. M. BLACKLIST

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 13—(AP) Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) because the non-union Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official announced today.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

AUG 1 4 1942

Petrillo Drums Up More Music Trouble

'Dictator' Threatens to Blacklist Smith College If Non-Union Boston Symphony Plays There

By The United Press

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the WAVES, unless a scheduled concert is cancelled.

College officials declined comment on Petrillo's threat which would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear at John M. Greene Hall to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy Auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston Symphony Orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tours of the country's only non-union symphony organization.

Petrillo recently threatened the Springfield Auditorium with blacklisting if an appearance of the orchestra there was not cancelled. Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play at Springfield in February and at Smith College in March when it goes on tour after the regular symphony season in Boston.

HE DIDN'T ASK AFL musicians union for permission so Local 198 of the American Federation of Musicians fined Orchestra Leader Don Mario $500 for joining a crowd of 20,000 at a Providence, R. I., patriotic rally in singing The Star Spangled Banner. Mario said he sang of "the land of the free" as a member of the mayor's committee and not as an entertainer.

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 1 4 1942

Union Ban Seen Affecting Plans For Wave Units

NORTMAMPTON, Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith college girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without schedultd concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

AUG 1 4 1942

COLLEGE IS BLACKLISTED

Musicians' Union Condemns Smith For Billing Boston Symphony

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Smith College, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), because the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra appears on its concert series, a Federation official announced Thursday.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton Local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a Spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith College officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formerly notified of the blacklisting.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS
NEWS

AUG 1 4 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (INS).—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians put Smith college on the blacklist today because the non-union Boston symphony has been scheduled to give a series of concerts.

The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by naval officers in charge of the training program of the waves, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 navy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

If the Boston symphony appears at the college all union artists and orchestras will be barred from giving performances. Among union member musicians who are barred are Jascha Heifetz, Elsie Houston, Brazilian soprano; the dual piano performers, Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson; the Rochester Philharmonic and the Cleveland symphony orchestras.

HAYWARD, CALIF.
REVIEW

AUG 13 1942

Ramblings Record

By MICHAEL LEVIN

BY A peculiar quirk, the Boston Symphony, which hasn't recorded at all for the past year, may soon be doing almost all the classical disc-cutting in the country. Last year, Victor (who holds their contract) was warned by the AFM to cease recording the symphony since it is a non-union organization. They complied, and with the exception of releases recorded before that date, it hasn't been heard from since.

Now, however, with all recording for union musicians banned by order of the union, it is highly probable that the Boston Symphony will be called on to fill in the musical breach. RCA-Victor won't do the recording, since Prexy Petrillo of the AFM would undoubtedly blacklist immediately any firm which used a non-union band, and would refuse them permission to use AFM-ers when the present dispute is settled. What may happen is that the orchestra's contract be farmed out to an "independent" record firm, organized solely for the purpose of recording the Boston unit.

* * *

This new Irving Berlin picture is certainly getting a big play from the record-makers. Almost all of them have planned many sides of the 13-tune score of "Holiday Inn," with Decca heading the list with an album by Bing Crosby, Fred Astaire, Bob Crosby's band, John Scott Trotter's orchestra, and the Ken Darby singers.

* * *

Best of the recent discs by new bands is "Trains in the Night" and 'Mad About Him, Sad Without Him, How Can I Be Glad Without Him Blues" as done by the Jerry Wald band on their first recording date.

* * *

Best of the week: Glenn Miller's 'Long Tail Mama" walks off with he swing award — the first he's otten in a long while. It's a far nore sprightly tune, with better hythm and solos than the Miller band has come up with of late. . . . Vocal: "He's My Guy," a pretty one by Tommy Dorsey, with his new string section and Jo Stafford's imple by lyric vocalings showing o good effect. . . . Novelty: "The Wolf Song," complete with howls and advice to worried girls. Cutting by Mitchell Ayres' band.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

AUG 16 1942

U. S. Surveys Radio Stations In New Move Against Petrillo

Washington Bureau of The Chicago Sun.

Washington, Aug. 15.—The government took another step today in its fight against James C. Petrillo, Chicago music union leader.

The Federal Communications Commission mailed questionnaires to all standard broadcast stations to ascertain the use of recordings, electrical transcriptions and musicians in broadcasts. Stations were requested to mail the replies in five days.

Results of the FCC survey will be used by the Justice Department in its suit at Chicago against the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) under the Sherman anti-trust act, it was reported.

FCC has received many protests following the recent cancellation of the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., and the order by Petrillo, A. F. M. president, commanding his members to desist from making recordings or electrical transcriptions after Aug. 1.

Other complaints to FCC which prompted the issuance of the questionnaire are the alleged failure or refusal of radio stations to employ Negro musicians in their studio orchestras, and the action of A. F. M. in requiring that stations be refused some or all network musical programs.

Orchestra Defies Petrillo.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 15.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo. The city property committee voted last night that it lacked authority to bar any group fro the hall.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1942

Springfield to Ignore Petrillo Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 14 (AP)—The Springfield City Property Committee stuck to its rental policy tonight in the face of a threat by the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) to blacklist the Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra played in it.

The committee's policy permits use of the hall by any individual or organizaation which pays the rental and guarantees protection of the building and occupants.

The provision went unchanged after President Raymond T. King of the Springfield Community Concert Association told the committee he had received no formal notification that the Musicians' Federation would ban the auditorium to union organizations if the Boston Symphony filled its engagement.

Only threat of blacklisting came by telephone from James C. Petrillo, president of the federation, King said, adding that in the absence of written confirmation his association had no intention of canceling the date.

The association is attempting to rearrange its schedule to bring the Boston orchestra here March 26, instead of the original date of Feb. 9, King reported, to avoid possible embarrassment to union organizations having auditorium dates after Feb. 9. None is scheduled for this season after March 26.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

AUG 16 1942

Smith College Placed On Petrillo's Blacklist

NORTHAMPTON, MASS., AUG. 15.—(INS).—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians put Smith college on the blacklist today because the non-union Boston symphony has been scheduled to give a series of concerts.

The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by naval officers in charge of the training program of the Waves, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 navy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

If the Boston symphony appears at the college all union artists and [illegible] from giving performances. Among union member musicians who are barred are Jascha Heifetz, Elsie Houston, Brazilian soprano; the dual piano performers, Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson; the Rochester philharmonic and the Cleveland symphony orchestras.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 15 1942

Hub Orchestra May Use Auditorium

The City Property Committee by a 2-1 vote last night favored permitting the Boston Symphony Orchestra use of the Municipal Auditorium despite published reports that James S. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, would put the hall on a black list, William S. Lowe, chairman, and J. Albert Greenaway were for the status quo, but Edgar V. Moquin registered vigorous objection, declaring, "I'm strongly against it. I'm not going to have the citizens of Springfield with no music because the Boston Symphony has come in here."

Raymond T. King, appearing before the committee by invitation, stated that in the more than 10 years he had been president of the Community Concerts Association the Boston Symphony had appeared at least six times in Springfield and was the prime favorite according to subscribers balloting. He told of talking to Edwin H. Lyman, Sr., president of the musicians local union, who informed him that Petrillo was handling the entire situation whereupon King telephoned to the national president at Chicago to ask for a statement of his position.

Petrillo's promise to supply this has not thus far been kept, said King, pointing out that he is to date dependent upon the newspaper stories. Originally set for Feb. 9, the appearance of the Boston Symphony will be changed to March 26, final date of the season, if current negotiations with the organization are successful, King said.

HERKIMER, N. Y.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1942

Petrillo Continues Drive On Boston Symphony

Northampton, Mass., (UP)—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the Waves, unless a scheduled concert is cancelled.

Petrillo's threat would prevent the appearanceof several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear at John M. Greene hall to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston Symphony Orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tour of the country's only non-union symphony organization.

Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 15 1942

Symphony May Join Union

BOSTON, Aug. 14 (UP).—"The Christian Science Monitor" said today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, long opposed to unionization, has held a conference with the American Federation of Musicians, American Federation of Labor affiliate, and the possibility of "a get together seems in sight." The Boston Symphony, the nation's only major nonunion orchestra and one of the highest-paid groups of musicians in the country, "has been hard pressed by the union," the newspaper said. "An announcement may be put out within a short time," the "Monitor" added. "What it may contain is not, however, forecast."

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 14 1942

Musicians Union Blacklists Smith

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1, may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-uinon Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 14 1942

Smith College Is Blacklisted For Hiring Boston Orchestra

NORTHAMPTON (AP). — Smith College girls and 900 "WAVES" scheduled to begin training here Oct. 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "WAVES" and that it appeared that the Navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 14 1942

Music Union Ban Hits Waves At Smith College

Northampton, Mass (AP) — Smith College girls and 900 "Waves" scheduled to begin training here Oct 1 may have to go without scheduled concerts and dances because the famed institution has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, said union musicians would be withheld from appearances at the college because Smith scheduled the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear at the college next March as part of a concert series.

Fretz said the action might also affect the annual proms, one of them a spring social for which each dormitory hires its own orchestra.

A college source said the Navy had asked the college to arrange musical entertainments for the "Waves" and that it appeared that the Navy women would be deprived of the entertainments by the union ban.

The college spokesman said tickets for the college concert series, which was to have included performances by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic orchestras, had been entirely sold or allotted.

SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS

AUG 15 1942

Boston Symphony Can Play in Hall

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 15 — (UP) — The non-union Boston Symphony orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite the threat of blacklisting by the head of the American Federation of Musicians.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

AUG 14 1942

Czar Petrillo Issues New Blacklist

NORTHAMPTON (Mass.) Aug. 13. (Exclusive)—Smith College, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) because the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official announced today. The president of the union is J. Caesar Petrillo.

[112]

PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

Waukegan Ill
News Sen

EL PASO, TEXAS
HERALD-POST

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

WASHINGTON, PA.
OBSERVER

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 15 1942

College Faces Petrillo Ban

Union Leader Threatens Smith Blacklist to Curb Boston Symphony Group

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians, continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the waves, unless a scheduled concert is cancelled.

College officials declined comment on Petrillo's threat which would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear at John M. Greene Hall to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy Auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston Symphony Orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tours of the country's only non-union symphony organization.

The Boston orchestra is scheduled to play at Springfield in February and at Smith College in March, when it goes on tour after the regular symphony season in Boston.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

WICHITA, KAN.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1942

WILL IGNORE BAN OF AFM MUSICIANS

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plans to Continue with Contracted Concerts

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Aug. 15—(UP)—The Boston symphony orchestra will play in the Springfield municipal auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federa. of Musicians (AFL).

The city property committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 16 1942

FCC Queries Radio Stations On Union Ties, Recordings

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (A. P.).—The Federal Communications Commission today asked all standard broadcast stations to report under oath their labor relations with musicians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

AUG 18 1942

MAY JOIN UNION

BOSTON, Aug. 18 (INS) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the country, may end a two-year dispute with the American Federation of Musicians by joining the union. A responsible spokesman for the orchestra revealed negotiations are now going on.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

wyck describes her marriage to Mr. Brent, so she can get hold of an old aunt's estate. It's done in an off-screen narration, with the camera pointing up the action as it takes place, and with Miss Stanwyck's hard, bitter voice telling what happened. She picked the guy up on a road in Vermont, so she could get the money, and placed herself just so, in the moonlight (while the background music plays "Hearts and Flowers") and finally persuaded the guy she really was the sweet young innocent she made herself out to be. So he married her, but on the wedding night she faked a faint, and sent him out to the drugstore for some medicine, so she would have time to pack her bag and get the hell out of there, right quick. "I'll never forget," says Miss Stanwyck cynically, "the stink of those apple blossoms in that room."

But, of course, the brand-new husband returns just as she's about to leave, and discovers the horrible truth that his wife is a phoney. And there is a terrible moment of silence and the back

Orchestra to Play in Springfield Despite Threat by Petrillo

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 15 (UP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.).

The city property committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizatilons under Petrillo from playing

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 16 1942

FCC Queries Radio Stations On Union Ties, Recordings

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (A. P.).—The Federal Communications Commission today asked all standard broadcast stations to report under oath their labor relations with musicians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Orchestra May Go Union

BOSTON, Aug. 18 (INS).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major nonunion orchestra in the nation, may become unionized, according to reports today. An spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

By New Threat For Music Union

Northampton, Mass.—(UP)—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the WAVES, unless a scheduled concert is canceled.

Petrillo's threat would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear at John M. Greene Hall to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy Auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston Symphony Orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tours of the country's only nonunion symphony organization. Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony orchestra plays.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

EPISCOPAL

All Saints', Chestnut Hill and Wilton; Stop 18, St. Paul Boulevard; Rev. E. K. Nicholson—8, Communion; Rev. 10, prayer and sermon.

Ascension—Lake at Riverside: Rev. W. C. Compton, S. T. D.—11, prayer and sermon by Rev. Jerome Kates.

Christ, East near Broadway: Rev. Donald H. Gratiot—8, Communion; 10:30, Choral Eucharist and sermon by Father J. Jefferson at 4, Adams; Epiphany, B. Persell Jr.—8, Communion; 9:30, Morning prayer and sermon.

Grace, Scottsville: Rev. N. A. Remmel; 8, Communion; 11, matins and sermon.

St. Andrew's, Averill at Ashland: Rev. F. C. Lee—8, Holy Communion; 11, Eucharist with sermon, Rev. H. L. Gaylord.

St. Andrew's, Caledonia: Rev. N. young innocent she made herself out to be. So he married her, but on the wedding night she faked a faint, and sent him out to the drugstore for some medicine, so she would have time to pack her bag and get the hell out of there, right quick. "I'll never forget," says Miss Stanwyck cynically, "the stink of those apple blossoms in that room."

But, of course, the brand-new husband returns just as she's about to leave, and discovers the horrible truth that his wife is a phoney. And there is a terrible moment of silence and the best-

...otican:—
...n Symphony orchestra be... to play "The Union Forever! ...h Boys, Hurrah!" This ought t... go a long way toward settling the trouble between this world-wide musical organization and the Springfield Musicians' union.

WILLIS VAN WAGENEN.

Holyoke, August 14, 1942.

the Boston orchsetra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

...P—Wirephoto). This picture wa...
...chisaburo Nomura, last Tokyo ...
...for the voyage from the exchan...
...ence. It was to be acted upon ...
...later.
Thomas Berreta, a member of

...etrillo Threat Defied By Springfield Council

Use of Auditorium by Any Group To Be Permitted

Special to the Herald Tribune

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 14.—Springfield's City Property Committee refused to acknowledge Friday night a threat from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, American Federation of Labor affiliate, to blacklist the Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra makes a scheduled concert appearance there early next year.

By a 2-to-1 vote, City Council members who have jurisdiction over rental of the auditorium voted to make no change in established rental policy, which gives use of the building to any individual or organization meeting the committee's price and guaranteeing certain safeguards designed to protect the structure and its occupants.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
AUG 16 1942

FCC Queries Radio Stations On Union Ties, Recordings

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (A. P.).—The Federal Communications Commission today asked all standard broadcast stations to report under oath their labor relations with musicians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS
GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

THIS WEEK'S Victory Book, "How to Live on a Reduced War

ORCHESTRA MAY UNIONIZE

BOSTON, Aug. 18. (INS)—The Boston symphony orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony hall today.

...eration if the rest of the orchestra did.

conductor of the orchestra, ...is home in Lenox, disclosed that he was ready to join Petrillo's outfit if the rest of the orchestra does.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 16 1942

FCC Queries Radio Stations On Union Ties, Recordings

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (A. P.).—The Federal Communications Commission today asked all standard broadcast stations to report under oath their labor relations with musicians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS
GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

THIS WEEK'S Victory Book, "How to Live on a Reduced War

... 18.—(UNS) ...e Boston Symphony orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the country, may end a two-year dispute with the American Federation of Musicians by joining the union. A responsible spokesman for the orchestra, refusing to disclose his identity, revealed negotiations are now going on. Meanwhile, Dr. Serge Koussvitsky, at his home in Lenox, said he would join the Federation if the rest of the orchestra did.

conductor of the orchestra ... his home in Lenox, disclosed that he was ready to join Petrillo's outfit if the rest of the orchestra does.

Boston Symphony Will Play at Springfield, City Group Says

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blaccklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

The committee chairman, William S. Lowe, said last night that the city might obtain an injunction against Mr. Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing union organizations from playing there.

L.J.

7

HE FUR LINE-UP tells The miraculously low pri strength of I.J.Fox fur s appreciate the long-te America's leading ... enter. It was to be acted upon later.
Thomas Berrelta, a member of sermon.

(Grace, Scottsville; Rev. N. A. Remmel; 8, Communion; 11, matins and sermon.
St. Andrew's, Averill at Ashland; Rev. F. C. Lee—8, Holy Communion; 11, Eucharist with sermon, Rev. H. L. Gaylord.
St. Andrew's, Caledonia; Rev. N. ... young innocent she made herself out to be. So he married her, but on the wedding night she faked a faint, and sent him out to the drugstore for some medicine, so she would have time to pack her bag and get the hell out of there, right quick. "I'll never forget," says Miss Stanwyck cynically, "the stink of those apple blossoms in that room."

But, of course, the brand-new husband returns just as she's about to leave, and discovers the horrible truth that his wife is a phoney. And there is a terrible moment of silence and the heck-chairmanship of Miss Emmeline ... Street of New Haven, Ct., is to be ... May Knowlen ... Highland Park vespers.

EPISCOPAL

All Saints', Chestnut Hill and Winton; Stop 18 St. Paul Boulevard; Rev. E. K. Nicholson—8, Communion; 10, prayer and sermon.
Ascension—Lake at Riverside; Rev. W. C. Compton, S. T. D.—11, prayer and sermon by Rev. Jerome Kates.
Christ, East near Broadway; Rev. Donald H. Gratiot—8, Communion; 10:30, Choral Eucharist and sermon by Father J. W. Denness Cooper.
Epiphany, Jefferson at Adams; Rev. C. E. Persell Jr.—8, Communion; 9:30, Morning prayer and sermon.

Boston Symphony To Play Springfield

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield municipal auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.)

The city property committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston orchsetra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W., E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitsky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 16 1942

FCC Queries Radio Stations On Union Ties, Recordings

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (A. P.).—The Federal Communications Commission today asked all standard broadcast stations to report under oath their labor relations with musicians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS

THIS WEEK'S Victory Book, "How to Live on a Reduced War

BUY INCOME PROPERTY

EAST SIDE. 6 family, good condition. Income $107 month. Brass plumbing. Price $6750.

May Be Unionized

There is a strong possibility that James C. Petrillo is close to victory in his two-year fight to get members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into the ranks of his union, according to reports in Boston. The orchestra has been the only major nonunion orchestra in the country for several years.

An official of the orchestra did not deny that negotiations are now going on to sign up the musicians as union members, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, at his home in Lenox, disclosed that he was ready to join Petrillo's outfit if the rest of the orchestra does.

e one . . .
basic eauties . . .
rect strength of I.J.Fox fur s appreciate the long-te Arnaud-de Berer-Upon
Thomas Berreta, a member of

WILL DEFY PETRILLO

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield municipal auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president o fthe American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

The city property committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Communitq Concerts Association.

tions under Petrillo from playing the form). 43 Measuring 8 Ventilate. stick.

9 Court (abbr.). 45 Mudar.
11 Suffer. 46 Township
15 New York (abbr.).
(abbr.). 49 Hops' kiln.
16 Print measure. 50 Island (abbr.)
18 Timber tree. 53 Postpaid
20 Bitter vetch. (abbr.).
23 Trite. 55 Rough lava.

7 8 9 12

16:30. Chief Justice Hughes
by Father J. W. Denness Cooper.
Epiphany, Jefferson at Adams;
Rev. C. E. Persell Jr.—8, Communion; 9:30, Morning prayer and sermon.
(Grace, Scottsville; Rev. N. A. Remmel; 8, Communion; 11, matins and sermon.
St. Andrew's, Averill at Ashland; Rev. F. C. Lee—8, Holy Communion; 11, Eucharist with sermon, Rev. H. L. Gaylord.
St. Andrew's, Caledonia; Rev. N.
young innocent she made herself out to be. So he married her, but on the wedding night she faked a faint, and sent him out to the drugstore for some medicine, so she would have time to pack her bag and get the hell out of there, right quick. "I'll never forget," says Miss Stanwyck cynically, "the stink of those apple blossoms in that room."

But, of course, the brand-new husband returns just as she's about to leave, and discovers the horrible truth that his wife is a phoney. And there is a terrible moment of silence and the hard

Petrillo Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (UP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Pertrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL). It was said the City might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the Auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

Winter.

symphony organization.

Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

23 Trite. 55 Rough lava.

...S TO PACIF... PET...O

...oston Symphony Confe...on Music Union Compromise

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, Aug. 14—The possibility of a compromise between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians is being explored by orchestra and union officials.

Both sides avoided comment today as to negotiations and the terms discussed at a recent conference, but the orchestra is understood to seek a special cultural craft status for its players.

Some impetus to peace efforts came from Mr. Petrillo's recent threat to bar the Boston Symphony from the Springfield Municipal Auditorium, where the orchestra had been booked by the Community Concert Association for next Winter.

symphony organization.

Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays.

Smith College

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP).—Smith College, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) because the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official announced.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
AUG 16 1942

FCC Queries Radio Stations On Union Ties, Recordings

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (A. P.).—The Federal Communications Commission today asked all standard ...

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Symphony To Join Union

International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized, according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman refused to deny negotiations were under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

to have their own organization.
A resolution calling on the Army Air Fighter Command of the Army Air Forces to put aircraft observation posts closer to cities or villages when possible in order to reduce the amount of driving required of observers was also passed.
Lee Pennington, an inspector of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, told the convention this morning that the American Legion had furnished the FBI with "extreme value" in the investigation of "extreme value" in the investigation of subversive activities.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
AUG 16 1942

FCC Queries Radio Stations On Union Ties, Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Eastern Group Defies Musicians' Boss' Threat

By The United Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authoriy to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Assn.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the BOSTON, Aug. 18 (INS).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra in the major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does.

Petrillo Threatens Boston Symphony

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14.—(UP)—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the Waves, unless a scheduled concert is cancelled.

College officials declined comment on Petrillo's threat which would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy Auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston Sypmphony Orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tours of the Country's only non-union symphony organization.

Under his ruling, no union musician can appear at a place where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitsky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

News

OF NEW ENGLAND

NORTHAMPTON—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians has placed Smith college on the blacklist because the non-union Boston Symphony has been scheduled to give a series of concerts. The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by naval officers in charge of the training program of the WAVES, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 Naxy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Aug. 15.—(U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

The city property committee voted 2 to 1 last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Yesterday's Results
New York 15, Athletics 0.
St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

Jenkins became ... tendants tried to get him to g through the pass gate instead of th front door. He went back to h hotel from whence the promoter

Boston Symphony May Join Union

Boston, Mass., Aug. 18 (INS)—The Boston symphony orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized, according to reports today.

A spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does.

He was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Radio Stations Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Petrillo Extends Symphony Ban

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston symphony orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith college, new home of the WAVES, unless a scheduled concert is canceled.

College officials declined comment on Petrillo's threat which would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear to entertain students and 900 members of the new navy auxiliary.

Petrillo already has prevented the Boston symphony orchestra from making radio appearances and now is trying to end the tours of the country's only non-union symphony organization.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 —The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

Orchestra May Yield To Petrillo

BOSTON, Aug. 18,—(INS)—The Boston symphony orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does.

He was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Radio Stations Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Petrillo Ban Due On Smith College

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (UP).—President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the WAVES unless a scheduled concert is canceled.

College officials declined comment on Petrillo's htreat, which would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands slated to appear at John M. Greene Hall to entertain students and 900 members of the new Navy auxiliary.

ganizations under Petrillo from playing there.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

---

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Yesterday's Results
New York 15, Athletics 0.
St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

Louis Wagner, 2221 Sunbury-rd. Army, Overseas.

Henry S. Saylor, 2390 Parkwood-av. Air Corps, Afr.

AS A FIRST STEP TOWARD CIVILIZATION BRICK SHOWS US

Radio Stations ... Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Boston Orchestra To Play Despite Blacklist Threat

SPRINGFIELD (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

The city property committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

---

Chilean President Will Visit F. D.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Aug. (UP).—President Rios today accepted President Roosevelt's invitation to visit the United States. A reliable source said will leave before Oct. 15.

For those who think, feel, kn Runyon's column creates k

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Yesterday's Results
New York 15, Athletics 0.
St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

Louis Wagner, 2221 Sunbury-rd. Army, Overseas.

Henry S. Saylor, 2390 Parkwood-av. Air Corps, Afr.

AS A FIRST STEP TOWARD CIVILIZATION BRICK SHOWS HIS

Radio Stations ... Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Petrillo Threatens To Blacklist Music Hall

BOSTON, (UP) — It looks as though the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be allowed to play at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium, but it won't be certain for several days, until the city property committee makes a decision.

President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians threatens to blacklist the auditorium if the non-union orchestra plays there. However, a spokesman for the property committee says the committee is obliged to rent the auditorium to any organization as long as it isn't subversive.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15. —The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Yesterday's Results
New York 15, Athletics 0.
St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

Louis Wagner, 2221 Sunbury-rd. Army, Overseas.

Henry S. Saylor, 2390 Parkwood-av. Air Corps, Ariz.

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Radio Stations s, Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitzky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Yesterday's Results
New York 15, Athletics 0.
St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

Louis Wagner, 2221 Sunbury-rd. Army, Overseas.

Henry S. Saylor, 2390 Parkwood-av. Air Corps, Afiz.

DRISCOLL & MORAN
MEMORIAL HOME FOR FUNERALS

Exclusive Ambulance Service
74 No. Main St. 990-Tel.-991
T. J. Moran, Free police prepared to meet the all-India Congress' next step. Mayor Yusuf Meyerally is already under arrest. Dr. Ghorpure is believed by informed circles to be the brains of the "undercover" operations of the Congress.
Just how soon the organized non-
Caldwell, Dr. H. L. Henderson, J. H. J. Anderson, Ward Wilson, L. H. Whitley, Herbert C. Willis, Charles L. Bruce, Norman Riley, B. J. Jackson, F. E. DeFrante, Andrew Perkins, Cleo Blackburn, State Senator Robert Lee Brokenburr, Bernard

and FUNERAL DIRECTOR
EST. SINCE 1913
LADY ATTENDANT IF DESIRED

Waves Concert

Northampton, Mass., Aug. 14.—(UP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, continued his campaign against the Boston Symphony Orchestra today by threatening to blacklist Smith College, new home of the Waves, unless a scheduled concert is canceled.

College officials declined comment on Petrillo's threat, which would prevent the appearance of several symphony orchestras, soloists and dance bands that would appear at John M. Greene Hall to entertain students and 900 members of the Navy auxiliary.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Radio Stations s, Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitsky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Entered at the Post Office at Chic as second-class mail matt

The news columns shall be fair a the editorial columns shall be hon in the expression of conscientio
[Copyright, 1942]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 15,

For TRUTH has such a face a mien
T. J. Moran, Pres

Prepared to meet the all-India Congress' next step. Mayor Yusuf Meyerally is already under arrest.
Dr. Ghorpure is believed by informed circles to be the brains of the "undercover" operations of the Congress.
Just how soon the organized non-
J. Anderson, Ward Wilson, L. H.
Whitley, Herbert C. Willis, Charles

e one . . .

Louie Wagner, 2221 Sunbury-rd. Army, Overseas.
Henry S. Saylor, 2390 Parkwood-av. Air Corps, Afriz.

or the next—let's be prepared rever."

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE
Yesterday's Results
New York 15, Athletics 0.
St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

WAVES' College

International News Service

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 15.—James Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians put Smith College on the blacklist today because the non-union Boston Symphony has been scheduled there in a series of concerts.

The blacklist affects five other concerts in the series, and also a new series of performances requested by naval officers in charge of the training program of the WAVES, who asked college officials to provide musical entertainment for the 900 Navy auxiliaries going into training at the college next month.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

Radio Stations
s, Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitsky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

the Boston Symphony orchestra believes that musicians have an important role during the war and accordingly has issued the following appeal to American musicians:

Works by American born composers received 121 performances at the hands of the nation's 16 major symphony orchestras during the season 1941-42, an increase of 29 ove rthe preceding year. This is one of the interesting facts revealed in the National Music council's third annual survey of compositions performed by these 16 orchestras at the regular subscription concerts in their home cities.

tal policy, which gives use of the building to any individual or organization meeting the committee's price and guaranteeing certain safeguards designed to protect the structure and its occupants.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Radio Stations s, Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitsky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

son of Mr. and Mrs. Humbert, stationed at Fort Serlidan.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Schreiner, M. Schreiner Sr., with Mr. and Mrs. W. Webster, are spending this week at Shawano, Wis.

Mr. and Mrs. U. Kiehl entertained guests from Chicago the past weekend.

By Springfield Council

Use of Auditorium by Any Group To Be Permitted

Special to the Herald Tribune

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 14.—Springfield's City Property Committee refused to acknowledge tonight a threat from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, American Federation of Labor affiliate, to blacklist the Municipal Auditorium if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra makes a scheduled concert appearance there early next year.

By a 2-to-1 vote, City Council members who have jurisdiction over rental of the auditorium voted to make no change in established rental policy, which gives use of the building to any individual or organization meeting the committee's price and guaranteeing certain safeguards designed to protect the structure and its occupants.

Louis Wagner, 2221 Sunbury-rd. Army, Overseas.

Henry S. Saylor, 2390 Parkwood-av. Air Corps, Ariz.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Yesterday's Results

New York 15, Athletics 0.

St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

Radio Stations Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W., E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitsky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Boston Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 15 (UP) —The non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by Pres. James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one last night that the committee lacked the right to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

Louis Wagner, 2221 Sunbury-rd. Army, Overseas.

Henry S. Saylor, 2390 Parkwood-av. Air Corps, Afr.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15. —The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians.

The city propety committee voted two to one last night that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall where the Boston Orchestra has been booked for a Winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said last night the city might obtain an injunction against Petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing the

Major Leagues

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Yesterday's Results

New York 15, Athletics 0.

St. Louis 5, Cleveland 2 (night).

Radio Stations ... Recordings

cians and musicians' unions, and to detail their use of transcriptions and recordings in broadcasting.

The questionnaire was issued by the Commission in connection with an investigation of the cancellation of a proposed broadcast by the National High School Orchestra from Interlochen, Mich., and the recent order of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), prohibiting members from playing for recordings for other than private use.

ASKED OF CONTRACTS

The Government has brought suit to invalidate the recording ban.

Among the 23 questions were some relating to the employment of Negro musicians, including the number and the periods for which they have been employed.

Radio stations are asked to say whether they operate under a written contract with a musicians' union and if they do, to submit a copy of the contract. In the absence of a written contract, they are asked whether they have a verbal agreement or understanding, and if so, to describe it.

USE OF AMATEURS

The stations must describe the use made of non-professional musicians, including amateurs and such organizations as the United States Army Band.

The FCC is asking also whether at any time in the last three years the station has had instances where amateur musicians have been kept off the air or permitted to broadcast only after professional "stand-bys" were specially employed for the occasion.

May Embrace Union

By International News Service

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield Auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, disclosed that he was ready to join the Petrillo outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He said he would "go in automatically in that case." Dr. Koussevitsky added, however, he was unaware of any negotiations between members of the orchestra and the union.

Springfield to Defy Petrillo's Threat

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (U. P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium despite a blacklist threat by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.).

The City Property Committee voted two to one that it lacked authority to bar any musical group from the hall, where the Boston orchestra has been booked for a winter concert by the Community Concerts Association.

Committee Chairman William S. Lowe said the city might obtain an injunction against petrillo if the auditorium were blacklisted, preventing organizations under Petrillo from playing there.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 17 1942

Boycotting the AFM

Editor:

Boss Petrillo has added the last straw to the camel's back in his attempt to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from keeping its engagements and it is up to us music lovers to do something about it.

The listeners greatly outnumber his followers and if we, with the American Federation of Music Clubs, would refuse hereafter to buy tickets to any concert by his union musicians, Czar Petrillo would find his throne and his vast income rather insecure. I shall follow this procedure, much as I enjoy fine music.

DISGUSTED.

Providence.

Six of Like Mind

Editor:

We notice in the paper that the Musicians' Union headed by a man named Petrillo is creating a great deal of trouble. We suggest as a simple way out of the problem that from today on everybody employing musicians—whether they be broadcasting stations, hotels, or whatnot—refuse to employ any musician who belongs to Petrillo's Union.

There are plenty of good records that can be used to get all the music we want, and there are plenty of Army bands that could be hired to give us band music; and they would be very glad to get this additional money.

So let us end Petrillo this way.

J. B. C., R. E. W., L. B. W.,
E. P. H., J. H. W., F. J. O.

Providence.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER
AUG 19 1942

Letters From Our Readers

Music Note

New York, N. Y.

Editor, Daily Worker:

The Daily Worker has published many interesting articles about Shostakovich and the Seventh Symphony and quite rightly so for it is a work of world importance, an undoubted masterpiece. In one of them Mr. Koussevitsky is quoted as saying, "No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to music of Shostakovich. . . ."

I have not noticed it recalled in any of your articles, and want to draw your attention to the fact that Beethoven, too, wrote music during the siege of his city. In 1809 during the time that the French held Vienna, Beethoven wrote the String Quartet Opus 74 and the Piano Concerto Opus 73, two works of serenity and strength.

H. C.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 19 1942

See Petrillo Gain In Boston Dispute

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—Music circles here report that James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, appears to be gaining in his fight to compel the Boston Symphony Orchestra to sign with the AFM. Negotiations were reported under way, although confirmation could not be obtained.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 18.—The city property committee, in a two-to-one vote, rejected a plea to cancel the booking of the Community Concert Association for an appearance here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Municipal Auditorium. The AFM had threatened to blacklist the auditorium if the orchestra were permitted to appear there.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 31 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

● Rochester, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

NORWICH, N. Y.
SUN

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NEWBURGH, N. Y.
NEWS

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

AUG 25 1942

Boston Symphony Program Dropped

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25—(I. N. S.).—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theatre for the 1942-43 concert season after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians, had demanded that action.

[illegible] was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musician, had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston Orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston Orchestra performed.

—V—

[illegible] after an absence of several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot, at least so far as the outsider can see, make ends meet if it is forced to become a completely local organization without an absolute guarantee of financial success from Bostonians. But is such a guarantee possible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further steps could Petrillo take to make life miserable for the orchestra? We should not be surprised now to hear he had withdrawn the symphonies of Beethoven from public domain, or forbidden the selling of a new G string to Richard Burgin. At least, it can be reasonably assumed that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to hire or fire whomever he chooses. It may be that the orchestra's negotiators can secure some sort of an agreement with the union to give it a special status guaranteeing it its artistic integrity, but what does artistic integrity mean to a man who is quoted as saying that Heifetz is no better than some street fiddler?

As it stands now, the orchestra, if it joins the union, is buying a capricious pig in a poke. It may be healthier financially than it is now, but what's the good of that if its standards topple, its personnel involved in continual jurisdictional squabble and its tradition dead? On the other hand, if it doesn't join the union (and the men stand to benefit not one dollar in additional wages) can the orchestra survive at all? It is this heart-breaking conflict that is now occupying the negotiating committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. While we can do nothing to help it during the negotiations, we can at least hope it will find some way to defy its tormentors, and we can resolve, come what may, to support the orchestra more this year than ever before.

HOUSTON, TEX.
PRESS

DENVER, COLO.
ROCKY MT. NEWS

MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR

SIOUX CITY, IOWA
TRIBUNE-JOURNAL

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT

SEP 9 - 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

Rochester has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down.—New York World-Telegram.

* * *

r! led its mpho-

ar!
ed its Sym-annual date with the Bos-isals from James Caesar ration of Musicians.

with few charms, hath unionized era. Pianam:

ual date estra for Petrillo, ration of illo, with must be . Pianis-

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Rochester—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.

ONEIDA, N. Y.
DISPATCH

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

CINCINNATI, O.
POST

AUG 29 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

●

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2.—(AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

[illegible] 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

NORWICH, N. Y.
SUN

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

Pacific War Aim

Petrillo Threat Bans Concert

International News Service

ROCHESTER, N. Y. Aug. 25—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastern Theatre of the 1942-43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musician, had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston Orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston Orchestra performed.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot, at least so far as the outsider can see, make ends meet if it is forced to become a completely local organization without an absolute guarantee of financial success from Bostonians. But is such a guarantee possible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further steps could Petrillo take to make life miserable for the orchestra? We should not be surprised now to hear he had withdrawn the symphonies of Beethoven from public domain, or forbidden the selling of a new G string to Richard Burgin. At least, it can be reasonably assumed that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to hire or fire whomever he chooses. It may be that the orchestra's negotiators can secure some sort of an agreement with the union to give it a special status guaranteeing it its artistic integrity, but what does artistic integrity mean to a man who is quoted as saying that Heifetz is no better than some street fiddler?

As it stands now, the orchestra, if it joins the union, is buying a capricious pig in a poke. It may be healthier financially than it is now, but what's the good of that if its standards topple, its personnel involved in continual jurisdictional squabble and its tradition dead? On the other hand, if it doesn't join the union (and the men stand to benefit not one dollar in additional wages) can the orchestra survive at all? It is this heart-breaking conflict that is now occupying the negotiating committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. While we can do nothing to help it during the negotiations, we can at least hope it will find some way to defy its tormentors, and we can resolve, come what may, to support the orchestra more this year than ever before.

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!

From the New York World-Telegram:

Rochester has canceled its annual date with the Boston symphony orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Rochester—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.

Covington Soldier

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater at Rochester, N. Y., in deference to Boss Petrillo's threats of boycott. The orchestra has appeared at Rochester regularly for 10 years. A happy decade that knew not Petrillo!

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot, at least so far as the outsider can see, make ends meet if it is forced to become a completely local organization without an absolute guarantee of financial success from Bostonians. But is such a guarantee possible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further steps could Petrillo take to make life miserable for the orchestra? We should not be surprised now to hear he had withdrawn the symphonies of Beethoven from public domain, or forbidden the selling of a new G string to Richard Burgin. At least, it can be reasonably assumed that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to hire or fire whomever he chooses. It may be that the orchestra's negotiators can secure some sort of an agreement with the union to give it a special status guaranteeing it its artistic integrity, but what does artistic integrity mean to a man who is quoted as saying that Heifetz is no better than some street fiddler?

As it stands now, the orchestra, if it joins the union, is buying a capricious pig in a poke. It may be healthier financially than it is now, but what's the good of that if its standards topple, its personnel involved in continual jurisdictional squabble and its tradition dead? On the other hand, if it doesn't join the union (and the men stand to benefit not one dollar in additional wages) can the orchestra survive at all? It is this heart-breaking conflict that is now occupying the negotiating committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. While we can do nothing to help it during [illegible] it will find some way to defy [illegible] me what may, to support the [illegible]efore.

Rochester Music Ban

ROCHESTER. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastern Theatre here in deference to the demands of James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians.

[illegible] few major conductors [illegible] Petrillo's fold, said he was prepared to join the union if the orchestra members do.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

[illegible] appearance there of other union musicians, it was stated.

---

the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

Mr. Petrillo has been defied at Springfield, Mass., and the Boston Symphony is scheduled to appear as usual on the Winter program of the Municipal Auditorium there. Mr. Petrillo had threatened to blacklist the auditorium.

The program for the concert series here listed the appearance of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Rochester—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

Covington Soldier

[illegible] Information or [illegible] to the center. [illegible] back.

ROCHESTER—The Civic Music association has revealed that the Boston Symphony orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman theatre for the 1943 concert season. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

[illegible] ed its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

[illegible] ginual date with the Bos- [illegible] isals from James Caesar [illegible] ration of Musicians. [illegible], with few charms, hath [illegible] a unionized era. Pian-

---

[illegible] Tyrone Power Joan Fontaine "This Above All" [illegible] Conrad Veidt-Ann Avars "Nazi Agent" [illegible] Clive Brooke Diana Wynyard "Cavalcade" [illegible] Rio Grande" [illegible] "You're Telling Me"

[illegible] Rochester Music Ban [illegible] Petrillo's fold, said he was prepared to join the union if the orchestra members do. [illegible] Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed. [illegible] appearance there of other union musicians, it was stated.

[illegible] Defeat [illegible] Murdock; Nance [illegible] Game Warden [illegible] over Smith

---

[illegible] se In Abbeville

---

[114]

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean a seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot, at least so far as the outsider can see, make ends meet if it is forced to become a completely local organization without an absolute guarantee of financial success from Bostonians. But is such a guarantee possible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further step could Petrillo take to make life miserable for the orchestra? We were surprised now to hear he had withdrawn the music of Beethoven from public domain, or forbidden the use of a violin string to Richard Burgin. At least, it can be said that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to hire or fire whomever he chooses. It may be that the orchestra's negotiators can secure some sort of an agreement with the union to give it a special status guaranteeing it its artistic integrity, but what does artistic integrity mean to a man who is quoted as saying that Heifetz is no better than some street fiddler?

As it stands now, the orchestra, if it joins the union, is buying a capricious master. It may be healthier financially than it is now, but if its standards topple, its jurisdictional squabble and its [illegible] and, if it doesn't join the union [illegible] one dollar in additional wages) [illegible] It is this heart-breaking conflict [illegible] committee of the Boston [illegible] thing to help it during [illegible] find some way to defy [illegible] at may, to support the

---

Speaking of Petrillos, James, president of the American Federation of Musicians, seems on the brink of victory in his struggle with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An orchestra official declined in Boston, the other day, to deny that negotiations now are going on to sign up the musicians as union members, and Serge Koussevitsky, one of the few major conductors outside Mr. Petrillo's fold, said he was prepared to join the union if the orchestra members do.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

---

the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

Mr. Petrillo has been defied at Springfield, Mass., and the Boston Symphony is scheduled to appear as usual on the Winter program of the Municipal Auditorium there. Mr. Petrillo had threatened to blacklist the auditorium.

The program for the concert series here listed the appearance of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Rochester—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

DROP BOSTON ORCHESTRA

ROCHESTER — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater here in deference to the demands of James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians. This was revealed Monday when the Civic Music Association made public the concert series for the 1942-1943 season.

[illegible] major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

AUG 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

[illegible] Great Caesar!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot, at [illegible] as the outsider can see, make ends meet [illegible] a completely local organization without [illegible] financial success from Bostonians. But [illegible] sible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further st[illegible] make life miserable for the orchestra? [illegible] prised now to hear he had withdrawn [illegible] thoven from public domain, or forbidden [illegible] string to Richard Burgin. At least, it ca[illegible] that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to h[illegible] never he chooses. It may be that [illegible] cure some sort of an agreement [illegible] status guaranteeing it its artistic [illegible] integrity mean to a man who is [illegible] better than some street fiddler? [illegible] a, if it joins the union, is buying [illegible] be healthier financially than it [illegible] ers, Mrs. standards topple, its [illegible] onal squabble and its [illegible] doesn't join the union [illegible] r in additional wages) [illegible] heart-breaking conflict [illegible] mittee of the Boston [illegible] ning to help it during [illegible] find some [illegible]

UNION THREATENS BARS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 25 (INS)—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theatre for the 1942-43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past 10 years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

[illegible] musicians, it was stated.

---

the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

Mr. Petrillo has been defied at Springfield, Mass., and the Boston Symphony is scheduled to appear as usual on the Winter program of the Municipal Auditorium there. Mr. Petrillo had threatened to blacklist the auditorium.

The program for the concert series here listed the appearance of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today, that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Rochester—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

[illegible]ston Symphony Is Barred in Rochester

ROCHESTER, Aug. 25.—The Eastman Theatre here has omitted the Boston Symphony Orchestra from its 1942-'43 schedule. The move follows the warning by James C. Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president, that auditoriums permitting the non-union orchestra to appear would be forced to cancel all performances by AFM orchestras.

[illegible] Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

AUG 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

[illegible] N. Y., has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot [illegible] as the outsider can see, make ends meet [illegible] a completely local organization without [illegible] financial success from Bostonians. But [illegible] sible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further st[illegible] make life miserable for the orchestra? [illegible] prised now to hear he had withdrawn [illegible] thoven from public domain, or forbidden [illegible] string to Richard Burgin. At least, it ca[illegible] that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to hi[illegible] never he chooses. It may be that [illegible] cure some sort of an agreement [illegible] status guaranteeing it its artistic [illegible] integrity mean to a man who is [illegible] better than some street fiddler? [illegible] a, if it joins the union, is buying [illegible] be healthier financially than it [illegible] s standards topple, its [illegible] onal squabble and its [illegible] doesn't join the union [illegible] ir in additional wages) [illegible] heart-breaking conflict [illegible] mittee of the Boston [illegible] hing to help it during [illegible] find some [illegible]

[illegible], N. Y., has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

[illegible]chester Heeds Petrillo Threat

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25—The Boston Symphony orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theatre here in deference to the demands of James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians. This was revealed today when the Civic Music Association made public the concert series for the 1942-1943 season.

Mr. Petrillo had threatened to boycott the theatre, it was stated, if the program included the Boston Symphony, the only major non-union orchestra in the country, and was planning to order union musicians not to appear in any of the concerts.

Eastman Theatre, he would blacklist that auditorium and prevent the appearance there of other union musicians, it was stated.

the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

[illegible] Petrillo has been defied at [illegible]field, Mass., and the Boston [illegible]ny is scheduled to appear [illegible] on the Winter program [illegible]unicipal Auditorium there. [illegible]rillo had threatened to [illegible] the auditorium.

[illegible]ogram for the concert [illegible] listed the appearance [illegible]ons Jan. 8 after an absence [illegible] several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today, that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Roc[illegible]ster—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

Petrillo Forces Out Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 26—(INS)—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

AUG 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

[114]

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean a seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot [illegible] as the outsider can see, make ends meet [illegible] a completely local organization without [illegible] financial success from Bostonians. But [illegible] sible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further st[illegible] make life miserable for the orchestra? [illegible] prised now to hear he had withdrawn [illegible] thoven from public domain, or forbidde[illegible] string to Richard Burgin. At least, it ca[illegible] that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to [illegible] whenever he chooses. It may be that [illegible] secure some sort of an agreement [illegible] status guaranteeing it its artistic [illegible] integrity mean to a man who is [illegible] better than some street fiddler? [illegible] a, if it joins the union, is buying [illegible] be healthier financially than it [illegible] standards topple, its [illegible] onal squabble and its [illegible] doesn't join the union [illegible] r in additional wages) [illegible] heart-breaking conflict [illegible] mittee of the Boston [illegible] hing to help it during [illegible] find some [illegible]

PETRILLO ORDERS BAN ON SYMPHONY

The heavy hand of James C. Petrillo, czar of union music throughout the country, has fallen on the Boston Symphony again.

When the Rochester, N. Y., Civic Music Association announced its schedule of winter concerts for the Eastman Theatre at the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester yesterday, the Boston orchestra was missing from the December spot it has held on the association's program for 10 years.

Petrillo, who is the object of an anti-trust suit brought by the Federal Department of Justice, has been trying for several years to bring the Boston orchestra, the country's only remaining non-union large orchestra, under his American Federation of Musicians. Petrillo had threatened that if the orchestra appeared in the Eastman Theatre, he would blacklist that auditorium and prevent the appearance there of other union musicians, it was stated.

the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

[illegible] Petrillo has been defied at [illegible]field, Mass., and the Boston [illegible]ny is scheduled to appear [illegible] on the Winter program [illegible] unicipal Auditorium there. [illegible]rillo had threatened to [illegible] the auditorium.

[illegible] rogram for the concert [illegible] e listed the appearance [illegible] ons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today, that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Roc[illegible]ster—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

[illegible] N. Y., has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

[illegible] ous public is in addition to [illegible] ders who saw the recent fea[illegible] n Weekly—the 8,000,000 rea[illegible] The Will campaign on a platform [illegible] reflecting foreign policy views ex[illegible] pressed by Willkie.

Conferes With Bunting Mates

[illegible] tack.

Covington Soldier

[illegible] reated at [illegible] rly Satur- [illegible] d in auto

---

Petrillo Forces Out Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 26—(INS)—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

[illegible] 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

---

[114]

FOREIGN BONDS

To Appear in Rochester

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25 (INS)—The Civic Music Association today revealed the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of musicians, had demanded the concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

Mr. Petrillo had threatened to boycott the theatre, it was stated, if the program included the Boston Symphony, the only major non-union orchestra in the country, and was planning to order union musicians not to appear in any of the concerts.

The dropping of the orchestra caused disappointment here and the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

Mr. Petrillo has been defied at Springfield, Mass., and the Boston Symphony is scheduled to appear [illegible] on the Winter program [illegible] Municipal Auditorium there. Mr. Petrillo had threatened to blacklist the auditorium.

The program for the concert series here listed the appearance of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today, that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot [illegible] as the outsider can see, make ends meet [illegible] a completely local organization without [illegible] financial success from Bostonians. But [illegible] sible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further st[illegible] make life miserable for the orchestra? [illegible] prised now to hear he had withdrawn [illegible] thoven from public domain, or forbidden [illegible] string to Richard Burgin. At least, it ca[illegible] that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to [illegible] whenever he chooses. It may be that [illegible] secure some sort of an agreement [illegible] status guaranteeing it its artistic [illegible] integrity mean to a man who is [illegible] better than some street fiddler? [illegible] a, if it joins the union, is buying [illegible] be healthier financially than it [illegible] standards topple, its [illegible] onal squabble and its [illegible] doesn't join the union [illegible] r in additional wages) [illegible] heart-breaking conflict [illegible] mittee of the Boston [illegible] ning to help it during [illegible] find some [illegible]

[illegible] N. Y., has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Roc[illegible]ster—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

Petrillo Forces Out Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 26—(INS)—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

[illegible] 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

[114]

Out with the Chin Again; Petrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald Aug. 30

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot [illegible] as the outsider can see, make ends meet [illegible] a completely local organization without [illegible] financial success from Bostonians. But [illegible] sible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further st[illegible] make life miserable for the orchestra? [illegible] prised now to hear he had withdrawn [illegible] thoven from public domain, or forbidde[illegible] string to Richard Burgin. At least, it c[illegible] that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to hi[illegible] never he chooses. It may be that [illegible] cure some sort of an agreement [illegible] status guaranteeing it its artistic [illegible] integrity mean to a man who is [illegible] better than some street fiddler? [illegible] a, if it joins the union, is buying [illegible] be healthier financially than it [illegible] s standards topple, its [illegible] onal squabble and its [illegible] doesn't join the union [illegible] r in additional wages) [illegible] heart-breaking conflict [illegible] mittee of the Boston [illegible] hing to help it during [illegible] find some [illegible]

ROCHESTER NEEDS PETRILLO THREAT

Boston Symphony Is Dropped From Eastman Concerts Because of Union Leader

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theatre here in deference to the demands of James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians This was revealed today when the Civic Music Association made public the concert series for the 1942 1943 season.

Mr. Petrillo had threatened to boycott the theatre, it was stated, if the program included the Boston Symphony, the only major non-union orchestra in the country, and was planning to order union musicians not to appear in any of the concerts.

The dropping of the orchestra caused disappointment here and the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

Mr. Petrillo has been defied at Springfield, Mass., and the Boston Symphony is scheduled to appear as usual on the Winter program of the Municipal Auditorium there. Mr. Petrillo had threatened to blacklist the auditorium.

The program for the concert series here listed the appearance of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

Paul's Church

The marriage of Miss Rita Patricia Ryan, daughter of Mrs. Paul J. Ryan of 15 Goulding street, and Ensign Paul Burns Sharon, U. S. N. R., son of Dr. and Mrs. Arthur L. V. Sharon of 5 Otsego road, was solemnized this morning in St. Paul's Wolahan

---

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Roc[illegible]ster—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

[illegible] ous public is in addition to [illegible] He is [illegible] aders who saw the recent fea[illegible] ict Co[illegible] n Weekly—the 8,000,000 read[illegible] reflecting foreign policy views ex[illegible] pressed by Willkie.

He will campaign on a platform [illegible]

Confers With Bumping Mates

[illegible] to the center. Information on [illegible]

Petrillo Forces Out Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 26—(INS)—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

[illegible], N. Y., has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

CAME contains LE S NIC than that of the 4 o er largest of them — according to indepen

BONDS AND STAMP

Wint

Murdock; Nance

Game Warden

Defeat

M. A ver Smith

se In Abbeville

Covington Soldier

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

[illegible] 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

Princeton 0 0 0 1 0 0 0 0 0 1
Yale 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Batteries: [illegible]

Princeton's varsity defeated Yale, 5—1, on University Field today to wind up its Summer campaign with a record of seven victories, two defeats and one tie. John Dide, Tiger hurler, held the Bulls to two safeties while his mates were pounding Vic Machinski and Jack Neville, the Blue pitchers, for ten. The score by innings:

Petrillo Threat Has Its Effect on Eastman Theatre

Boston Symphony Is Dropped in Deference To Demands Made

ROCHESTER, N. Y. (Special) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theatre here in deference to the demands of James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians. This was revealed when the Civic Music Association made public the concert series for the 1942-1943 season.

Mr. Petrillo had threatened to boycott the theatre, it was stated, if the program included the Boston Symphony, the only major non-union orchestra in the country, and was planning to order union musicians not to appear in any of the concerts.

The dropping of the orchestra caused disappointment here and the circumstances of the action by the Music Association stirred wide indignation. The orchestra has appeared here for ten years.

Mr. Petrillo has been defied at Springfield, Mass., and the Boston Symphony is scheduled to appear as usual on the winter program of the municipal auditorium there. Mr. Petrillo had threatened to blacklist the auditorium.

The program for the concert series here listed the appearance of Lily Pons Jan. 8 after an absence of several years.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 20 1942

Dr. Koussevitzky Views BSO Union Situation

BOSTON—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reported by the Christian Science Monitor as not personally holding out against the orchestra going into the musicians' union. Other sources state that discussions are planned to establish terms in case orchestra members decide to join.

The Boston orchestra is the outstanding thorn in the side of James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, who has conducted a vigorous campaign to gather in these musicians by banning union musicians from halls where the non-union group plays. Petrillo's latest attack was to warn that he would call the Municipal Auditorium in Springfield "unfair" if the Boston orchestra were allowed to play there in February.

Dr. Koussevitzky is now reported by the Boston newspaper as regarding his joining the union along with the rest of the orchestra as automatic if a hookup is effected.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DROPPED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(INS) The Civic Music association revealed today that the Boston Symphony orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman theater for the 1942-43 concert season. The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians had demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

...ut with the Chin Again; ...etrillo vs. the Symphony

Herald — By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR. Aug. 30

While it is painfully apparent that no words of ours can help the Boston Symphony Orchestra find the right and proper solution to the ghastly quandary it now finds itself in we can, we hope, let it know that the music-lovers of Boston stand firmly behind it no matter what decision it is in the end forced to make. We hope that it can find some conceivable way out of its dilemma without succumbing to the pressure of the Musicians' Union, but we must be prepared for the worst and to understand, in the meantime, some of the factors which may in time bring the orchestra to its knees before Petrillo's onslaught.

In the first place, the orchestra is composed of two separate organizations: the musicians themselves and the board of trustees which, in a technical sense, employs the musicians. The board, whatever its wishes in the matter, cannot, under the Wagner act, express any opinion either for or against unionization and is presumably bound to accept the decision of the employes. The employes, however, can have little more than a general idea of the financial structure of the orchestra as a whole, especially since the operating deficits have always been privately guaranteed. They obviously know, though, that no engagements outside Boston mean a seriously diminished income in a business, so to speak, that has never been financially successful. The question is, is this loss sufficient to wreck the entire structure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

So far as Petrillo and the union is concerned, the issue is merely that of the closed shop, an hysteric and historic principle with labor unions which they mean to enforce in all branches of labor even if in so doing they wreck the entire structure upon which democracy (and labor) is founded: that of the self-determination of the individual. A closed shop means power in the hands of a few union bosses, for union bosses are the sole members of our democracy who are evidently beyond governmental control. Their awareness of this fact is proved time and again by their audacity in making (and enforcing) the most outrageously dictatorial measures conceivable. Indeed, they go abroad like some Oriental potentate distributing justice of the high, the middle and the low, while the government looks on in amazement, utterly powerless to stop them.

So it comes down, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to a test case for Petrillo. He has, like the gentlemen of Chicago of the roaring 20's said, in effect, "If you don't buy my brand of beer, I'm going to wreck your joint." The terrible fact of the matter appears to be that he can do it. For the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an expensive luxury. Its yearly financial operations touch seven figures and its annual deficit at least five. Since Petrillo has succeeded in enforcing his ruling that the orchestra could make no records, no broadcasts and could use no visiting artists and conductors, the revenue of the orchestra has, there is no denying, decreased considerably.

This year it is plainly evident that Petrillo, like Hitler with Poland, has "lost his patience." His ultimatum is, in effect, sign up with the union or vegetate in Boston. The steps he has already taken to enforce this command have been successful, for Springfield and several other cities have cancelled the orchestra's engagements there out of fear of Petrillo's reprisal. It is thus plain that a non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra will be forced to depend solely on Boston for its support. It cannot, [illegible] as the outsider can see, make ends meet [illegible] a completely local organization without [illegible] financial success from Bostonians. But [illegible] sible?

A PIG IN A POKE

And even if it were, what further st[illegible] make life miserable for the orchestra? [illegible] prised now to hear he had withdrawn [illegible] thoven from public domain, or forbidde[illegible] string to Richard Burgin. At least, it c[illegible] that he would do something to vent his wrath on his intractable children of Boston if they were to defy him and his union, and then the battle would commence all over again. It is no wonder that the orchestra is commencing to accept unionization as the lesser of two evils, especially since no relief from such dictatorships as Petrillo's is yet in sight from a government preoccupied with stamping out dictatorship in the far corners of the world.

In short, the question is, can the Boston Symphony Orchestra survive in Boston, or shall it accept unionization and bid its artistic standards goodbye? For even the most optimistic are aware that Petrillo, as boss of the union, can, if he wishes, force the orchestra to h[illegible] never he chooses. It may be that [illegible]ecure some sort of an agreement [illegible] status guaranteeing it its artistic [illegible]ntegrity mean to a man who is [illegible] better than some street fiddler? [illegible]a, if it joins the union, is buying [illegible] be healthier financially than it [illegible] standards topple, its [illegible]onal squabble and its [illegible] doesn't join the union [illegible]r in additional wages) [illegible] heart-breaking conflict [illegible]mittee of the Boston [illegible]ning to help it during [illegible] find some [illegible]

[illegible], N. Y., has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

BONDS AND STAMP[illegible]

Donald and Willard; [illegible] Mrs. Blanche Darling, Mrs. [illegible]

Winn[illegible] Defeat [illegible] M. A[illegible]

[illegible]se In Abbeville

Murdock; Nance [illegible] Game Warden [illegible]ver Smith

CAME[illegible] contains LE[illegible]S NIC[illegible] than that of the 4 o[illegible]er largest[illegible] of them — according to indepen[illegible]

[illegible]us public is in addition to [illegible]ders who saw the recent fea[illegible] [illegible]n Weekly—the 8,000,000 rea[illegible]

He is [illegible]ict Com[illegible]

He will campaign on a platform reflecting foreign policy views expressed by Willkie.

Confers With Bunting Mates

[illegible] conferences were held in Chicago yesterday between Republican leaders of the 4 o[illegible]er largest[illegible] of them — according to independ[illegible] [illegible] to the center. Information on [illegible]

Covington Soldier

[illegible]rated at [illegible]rly Satur[illegible]d in auto [illegible] tack.

[illegible]MS [illegible]TS

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

AUG 30 1942

Rochester—A concert scheduled for Rochester by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been cancelled by the Civic Music Association, because of the threatened union boycott of the Eastman Theater if the non-union musical organization is allowed to play there.

FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1942

SMITH COLLEGE BLACKLISTED BY PETRILLO UNION

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Smith college, one of the country's leading schools for women, has been blacklisted by the American Federation of Musicians because the nonunion Boston Symphony orchestra appears on its concert series, a federation official has announced.

Arthur S. Fretz, president of the Northampton local, also indicated the action might affect the annual proms, one of them a spring dance at which each dormitory hires its own orchestra, as well as the concert series.

The Boston Symphony's scheduled appearance next March is one of a series of concerts, which include scheduled programs by the Cleveland Symphony and the Rochester Philharmonic.

Smith college officials declined comment, declaring they had not been formally notified of the blacklisting.

Petrillo Forces Out Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 26—(INS)—The Civic Music Association revealed today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past ten years. It is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood, had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston orchestra performed.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

AUG 20 1942

FAMOUS SYMPHONY MAY BE UNIONIZED

Boston, Aug. 20 (INS)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union orchestra in the nation, may become unionized according to reports around Symphony Hall today.

A responsible spokesman for the Symphony refused to deny that negotiations were now under way between members of the orchestra and James C. Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians.

If the Boston Symphony joins the ranks of the federation it will end a two-year battle waged by Petrillo, president of the union, who recently threatened to blacklist the Springfield auditorium and Smith College for engaging non-union musicians.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1942

ASCAP Head Hits Critics, Conductors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 2. (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

SEP 3 - 1942

WOMEN—AND WHAT THEY ARE DOING

Music Federation Condemns Petrillo's Ban on Recordings as Blow to American Culture, Morale of Nation at War

By M. IRENE FROST

The ban placed on recordings by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, has been condemned by the National Federation of Music Clubs as "the most serious blow yet struck at American musical culture."

The Board of Directors of the Music Clubs Federation, which has just concluded a three-day session in Providence, R. I., passed a resolution urging its entire membership to express this condemnation and disapproval to local unions on the ground that such a ban is detrimental to the morale of a nation at war which it believes needs the "comfort and pleasure given by music in homes or wherever recorded music is used."

The board, which claims it represents at least 450,000 citizens, is sending copies of the resolution to President Roosevelt as well as to Petrillo, and intends giving active support to having the ban withdrawn.

At the same time word was issued concerning the resolution, plans were announced for the "Little Red House" project of the Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Centre. According to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, of Portland, Maine, president, the project is being sponsored by nationally prominent artists, among them, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of Curtis Institute of Music; Dr. Walter Damrosch, Senator Arthur Vandenburg, of Michigan, and Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of chamber music.

The sponsors for the project were announced at a luncheon given by the board to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony Committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project.

Mrs. Gannett states that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne House, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, who is identified with the restoration of Williamsburg, Va., will supervise the architectural work, having offered his services because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Centre.

Mrs. Lewis James Howell, president of the New Jersey Federation of Music Clubs, is attending the meeting.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

SEP 3 - 1942

MUSIC CLUB HEADS CLOSE CONVENTION

Delegates Urged to Carry on Fight Against Record Ban in Home Communities.

Representatives of music clubs of 34 States attending the three-day convention of the board of directors and president's council of the National Federation of Music Clubs were instructed last night at the final session to carry to their home communities the fight against a ban placed by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

In a formal resolution reaffirming the strong protest made by the board of directors on Monday against the Petrillo ban on recording for radio and other public performance, federations and individual clubs were urged to keep themselves informed of any further developments concerning the complaint filed against Petrillo by the Department of Justice and to voice the protest in their local communities.

The board pledged its continued support of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Centre summer school in recognition of the contribution to the development of American music the Boston Symphony Orchestra leader is making through the school. It promised similar support for other enterprises which tend to give opportunity and outlet to young American talent.

One of the first major organizations to abandon plans for a big biennial convention, the Federation as one of its final items of business yesterday formally decided to hold instead of its 1943 biennial an "American Festival" of music over the air next spring. A committee was appointed to arrange for a small business meeting to be held in a centrally located place instead of the convention. The committee will meet here this morning.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

SEP 5 - 1942

Again, Great Caesar!

Rochester has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with a few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!—N. Y. World Telegram.

AR!

canceled its annual date with rchestra for fear of reprisals president of the American

Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, aught its place in a unionized

BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO

SEP 5 - 1942

Petrillo Forces Out Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 29.—The Civic Music Association here has revealed that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-'43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, AFM head, demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past 10 years. It is the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston group performed.

BOX OFFICE
KANSAS CITY, MO.

SEP 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra will not be heard at the Eastman Theatre this winter in its annual concert season. Its projected appearance here brought the threat of a boycott against this house from James Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president . . . Seth Field, formerly at the Schine home office in Gloversville, is now serving in the coast guard.

ORCHESTRAL WORK PRIZE

Cleveland Group Will Award $1,000 for New Composition

N.Y. Times Sept. 1

The Cleveland Orchestra announces that in celebration of its forthcoming twenty-fifth anniversary season it offers a prize of $1,000 for a new unpublished and unperformed orchestral work not to exceed fifteen minutes in duration. The winning composition will be played at a pair of the orchestra's concerts this season in Cleveland. Artur Rodzinski, Arthur Shepherd, Albert Riemenschneider, F. Karl Grossman and Norman Lockwood will be the judges.

Entries should be scored for symphony orchestra of normal size and may be in any form. The manuscripts should contain the title of the work but not the name of the composer, who should send his or her name and the title by letter. All scores must be sent to C. J. Vosburgh, manager of the Cleveland Orchestra, Severance Hall, Cleveland, by Jan. 1. The Musical Arts Association, which supports the orchestra, is enabled to offer the prize through a gift of two of its trustees, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Kulas.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 1 5 1942

Eastman Concerts Off the Air; Musicians Not in Petrillo's Union

School Director Says Labor Leader's Policy Forbids Broadcasts—Urges Compromise Limiting Student Groups on Radio

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 14—Further broadcasting by the Eastman School of Music will not be permitted, because of the policy laid down by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, according to Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the school.

Many members of the Eastman School Symphony Orchestra, composed of 120 instrumentalists, are students who do not belong to the musician's union, Dr. Hanson said today, and therefore are subject to the Petrillo radio prohibition.

At the same time Dr. Hanson revealed that the Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra and the Rochester Civic Orchestra would be heard over the air in a series of concerts this season beginning in October. Broadcasting by these orchestras without conflicting with the Petrillo policy was made possible, he said, by the fact that the sixty members of both, some advanced students at the school, are members of the union. The Eastman-Rochester Symphony also records for Victor.

Discussing the ban on the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., Dr. Hanson called the American Federation of Musicians policy "a situation extremely complicated, with valid arguments on both sides." He said he had a plan, a suggestion he had not broached to broadcasting companies or union officials, for partial lifting of the Petrillo ban on broadcasting by student musical organizations.

Dr. Hanson said he believed that an agreement could be reached between the broadcasters and unionists to permit a limited number of concerts by student orchestras.

"It would be a dual system and I believe people would like to hear both professional and outstanding student organizations," he said. "Limiting the number of concerts by student organizations would, I believe, protect the union from competition to any great extent."

Soon after his appointment by George Eastman twenty years ago as director of the music school then being organized in Rochester, Dr. Hanson introduced the school's American composers' concerts. A few years later he established also the school's Festival of American Music. Both events won a prominent place in the musical world and through the medium of the radio enabled the American public to become better acquainted with the works of its own composers.

Last December Dr. Hanson canceled three engagements to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in one of his own compositions because the musicians' union forbade him to appear with a nonunion orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, conducted the Hanson composition, his Third Symphony.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

SEP 3 - 1942

Indianapolis Man Denies Taking Sides in Renting of Auditorium

Harrington Alleges Letter to Property Committee Was Misinterpreted

Howard Harrington, manager of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, today made it clear in a letter to The Union that a recent communication to the City Property Committee in no way took sides in the threat of leaders of the Musicians Union to put the Municipal Auditorium on its blacklist if the Boston Symphony Orchestra keeps its date for the Community Concerts Association.

Only a Request

Mr. Harrington said that his letter to the property committee had been misinterpreted. "My letter to Chairman Lowe," he wrote, "was simply a request that everything possible be done to assure our appearance in Springfield. Symphony orchestras should be concerned only in bringing the art of great music to the greatest number of people possible. I regret exceedingly that my letter should be represented in such a way as to make it appear that I am taking a standing in a situation with which our orchestra is not concerned."

Newspaper stories reporting on the attempt of the property board to reach a decision on the use of the Auditorium by the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra quoted a letter from Mr. Harrington to the affect that he hoped the property board would refuse the Boston Symphony concert.

Mr. Harrington sent a copy of his letter to Chairman Lowe. In it Mr. Harrington said, "I sincerely hope that the Committee on City Property will give careful consideration to this matter and do all within their power to make it possible for us to carry out our concert. It seems to me that from a merely business standpoint the Auditorium could not afford to lose the support, interest and co-operation of the many fine organizations who are booked to play there next season."

Mr. Harrington insisted that he is not concerned in the row between the union and the Boston orchestra. He was concerned, however, in anything action which might make it necessary for his organization to cancel its date (March 3, 1943) and cause a loss to the orchestra.

The property committee resolved its connection with the row by leaving to the 1943 property committee the renting of the Auditorium to the Boston Symphony. Meantime, the union is reported as pressing its drive for unionization of the orchestra.

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

SEP 3 - 1942

WOMEN—AND WHAT THEY ARE DOING

Music Federation Condemns Petrillo's Ban on Recordings as Blow to American Culture, Morale of Nation at War

By M. IRENE FROST

The ban placed on recordings by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, has been condemned by the National Federation of Music Clubs as "the most serious blow yet struck at American musical culture."

The Board of Directors of the Music Clubs Federation, which has just concluded a three-day session in Providence, R. I., passed a resolution urging its entire membership to express this condemnation and disapproval to local unions on the ground that such a ban is detrimental to the morale of a nation at war which it believes needs the "comfort and pleasure given by music in homes or wherever recorded music is used."

The board, which claims it represents at least 450,000 citizens, is sending copies of the resolution to President Roosevelt as well as to Petrillo, and intends giving active support to having the ban withdrawn.

At the same time word was issued concerning the resolution, plans were announced for the "Little Red House" project of the Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Centre. According to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, of Portland, Maine, president, the project is being sponsored by nationally prominent artists, among them, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of Curtis Institute of Music; Dr. Walter Damrosch, Senator Arthur Vandenburg, of Michigan, and Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of chamber music.

The sponsors for the project were announced at a luncheon given by the board to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony Committee collaborating with the "Little Red House" project.

Mrs. Gannett states that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne House, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, who is identified with the restoration of Williamsburg, Va., will supervise the architectural work, having offered his services because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Centre.

Mrs. Lewis James Howell, president of the New Jersey Federation of Music Clubs, is attending the meeting.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

SEP 3 - 1942

Indianapolis Man Denies Taking Sides in Renting of Auditorium

Harrington Alleges Letter to Property Committee Was Misinterpreted

Howard Harrington, manager of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, today made it clear in a letter to The Union that a recent communication to the City Property Committee in no way took sides in the threat of leaders of the Musicians Union to put the Municipal Auditorium on its blacklist if the Boston Symphony Orchestra keeps its date for the Community Concerts Association.

Only a Request

Mr. Harrington said that his letter to the property committee had been misinterpreted. "My letter to Chairman Lowe," he wrote, "was simply a request that everything possible be done to assure our appearance in Springfield. Symphony orchestras should be concerned only in bringing the art of great music to the greatest number of people possible. I regret exceedingly that my letter should be represented in such a way as to make it appear that I am taking a standing in a situation with which our orchestra is not concerned."

Newspaper stories reporting on the attempt of the property board to reach a decision on the use of the Auditorium by the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra quoted a letter from Mr. Harrington to the affect that he hoped the property board would refuse the Boston Symphony concert.

Mr. Harrington sent a copy of his letter to Chairman Lowe. In it Mr. Harrington said, "I sincerely hope that the Committee on City Property will give careful consideration to this matter and do all within their power to make it possible for us to carry out our concert. It seems to me that from a merely business standpoint the Auditorium could not afford to lose the support, interest and co-operation of the many fine organizations who are booked to play there next season."

Mr. Harrington insisted that he is not concerned in the row between the union and the Boston orchestra. He was concerned, however, in anything action which might make it necessary for his organization to cancel its date (March 3, 1943) and cause a loss to the orchestra.

The property committee resolved its connection with the row by leaving to the 1943 property committee the renting of the Auditorium to the Boston Symphony. Meantime, the union is reported as pressing its drive for unionization of the orchestra.

Theatre Operators to Organize "Junior Commandos" as Part of September Campaign.

Organization of a group of "Junior Commandos" to sell War Bonds and Stamps, and a special matinee of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" at The Playhouse Labor Day afternoon with the purchase of bonds and stamps as the price of admission, were planned

Music Convention Closes with Plea to Fight Petrillo

Representatives of music clubs of 34 States attending the three-day convention of the board of directors and president's council of the National Federation of Music Clubs were instructed last night at the final session to carry to their home communities the fight against a ban placed by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

In a formal resolution reaffirming the strong protest made by the board of directors on Monday against the Petrillo ban on recording for radio and other public performance, federations and individual clubs were urged to keep themselves informed of any further developments concerning the complaint filed against Petrillo by the Department of Justice and to voice the protest in their local communities.

The board pledged its continued support of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Centre summer school in recognition of the contribution to the development of American music the Boston Symphony Orchestra leader is making through the school. It promised similar support for other enterprises which tend to give opportunity and outlet to young American talent.

One of the first major organizations to abandon plans for a big biennial convention, the Federation as one of its final items of business yesterday formally decided to hold instead of its 1943 biennial an "American Festival" of music over the air next spring. A committee was appointed to arrange for a small business meeting to be held in a centrally located place instead of the convention. The committee will meet here this morning.

ORCHESTRAL WORK PRIZE

Cleveland Group Will Award $1,000 for New Composition

NY Times Sept. 13

The Cleveland Orchestra announces that in celebration of its forthcoming twenty-fifth anniversary season it offers a prize of $1,000 for a new unpublished and unperformed orchestral work not to exceed fifteen minutes in duration. The winning composition will be played at a pair of the orchestra's concerts this season in Cleveland. Artur Rodzinski, Arthur Shepherd, Albert Riemenschneider, F. Karl Grossman and Norman Lockwood will be the judges.

Entries should be scored for symphony orchestra of normal size and may be in any form. The manuscripts should contain the title of the work but not the name of the composer, who should send his or her name and the title by letter. All scores must be sent to C. J. Vosburgh, manager of the Cleveland Orchestra, Severance Hall, Cleveland, by Jan. 1. The Musical Arts Association, which supports the orchestra, is enabled to offer the prize through a gift of two of its trustees, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Kulas.

PHILADELPHIA

R!

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down!

BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO

SEP 5 - 1942

Petrillo Forces Out Boston Symphony

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 29.—The Civic Music Association here has revealed that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been dropped from the program of the Eastman Theater for the 1942-'43 concert season.

The action was taken after James C. Petrillo, AFM head, demanded that the Boston Symphony concerts be dropped. The Boston orchestra has appeared here for the past 10 years. It is the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the country.

Petrillo, it was understood had threatened to refuse to allow union musicians to appear at other Eastman concerts if the Boston group performed.

BOX OFFICE
KANSAS CITY, MO.

SEP 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra will not be heard at the Eastman Theatre this winter in its annual concert season. Its projected appearance here brought the threat of a boycott against this house from James Petrillo, American Federation of Musicians president . . . Seth Field, formerly at the Schine home office in Gloversville, is now serving in the coast guard.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 15 1942

Eastman Concerts Off the Air; Musicians Not in Petrillo's Union

School Director Says Labor Leader's Policy Forbids Broadcasts—Urges Compromise Limiting Student Groups on Radio

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 14—Further broadcasting by the Eastman School of Music will not be permitted, because of the policy laid down by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, according to Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the school.

Many members of the Eastman School Symphony Orchestra, composed of 120 instrumentalists, are students who do not belong to the musician's union, Dr. Hanson said today, and therefore are subject to the Petrillo radio prohibition.

At the same time Dr. Hanson revealed that the Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra and the Rochester Civic Orchestra would be heard over the air in a series of concerts this season beginning in October. Broadcasting by these orchestras without conflicting with the Petrillo policy was made possible, he said, by the fact that the sixty members of both, some advanced students at the school, are members of the union. The Eastman-Rochester Symphony also records for Victor.

Discussing the ban on the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., Dr. Hanson called the American Federation of Musicians policy "a situation extremely complicated, with valid arguments on both sides." He said he had a plan, a suggestion he had not broached to broadcasting companies or union officials, for partial lifting of the Petrillo ban on broadcasting by student musical organizations.

Dr. Hanson said he believed that an agreement could be reached between the broadcasters and unionists to permit a limited number of concerts by student orchestras.

"It would be a dual system and I believe people would like to hear both professional and outstanding student organizations," he said. "Limiting the number of concerts by student organizations would, I believe, protect the union from competition to any great extent."

Soon after his appointment by George Eastman twenty years ago as director of the music school then being organized in Rochester, Dr. Hanson introduced the school's American composers' concerts. A few years later he established also the school's Festival of American Music. Both events won a prominent place in the musical world and through the medium of the radio enabled the American public to become better acquainted with the works of its own composers.

Last December Dr. Hanson canceled three engagements to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in one of his own compositions because the musicians' union forbade him to appear with a nonunion orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, conducted the Hanson composition, his Third Symphony.

TIME
CHICAGO, ILL.
9/7/42

MUSIC

Fine Italian Hand

Labor's New Order in music continued its efforts to force the union label on the Boston Symphony Orchestra last week. From musical Rochester, N.Y. came word that the only major non-union orchestra in the U.S. will not play its annual December concert at Rochester's Eastman Theater this year. Reason: a threatened boycott of the theater by all union musicians.

This is not the first threat. In Springfield, Mass. two ominously polite letters last month told the committee in charge of the Municipal Auditorium that if the Boston Symphony plays there next winter, American Federation of Musicians members will blacklist the hall. In Northampton, Mass. an A.F. of M. official announced that Smith College will be blacklisted if the Boston orchestra plays there.

The threats came from minor officials, but their fine Italian handwriting looked suspiciously like that of A.F. of M.'s big boss, James C. (for Caesar) Petrillo. Ever since he became tsar of U.S. musicians, ex-Trumpeter Petrillo has considered the patrician Boston Symphony one of the chief thorns in his sensitive side. Union pressure has kept the Boston orchestra from broadcasting since 1939. Two years ago Petrillo forced RCA-Victor to stop recording the Boston Symphony, then exulted: "They're through!"

But the orchestra may not be able to buck Petrillo's New Order much longer. In Boston, orchestra and union officials were at last getting together. In Manhattan, many a musician was betting that Boston Symphony players will never again enter Carnegie Hall without union cards.

Meanwhile James Caesar Petrillo had another battle on his hands. Next fortnight the Government hopes to slap an injunction on Petrillo to end his boycott against recordings. On hand to push the Government's case will be Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold. So far Trust-Buster Arnold has had no great success in his brushes with organized labor. But this time he has popular opinion behind him. A Gallup Poll question, "Do you approve or disapprove of the Government taking legal action to stop Petrillo?" turned up a 73% chorus of ayes.

BOSTON, MASS.
RECORD

SEP 15 1942

NEW SEASON OF SYMPHONY

A symphony by Tikhon Khrennikov, eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, October 9.

Serge Koussevitzky, beginning his nineteenth season as the conductor of the Boston Symphony, has announced the new Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch for the opening program, in which he is also going to include the Second Symphony of Beethoven.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
EVENING NEWS PRESS

SEP 18 1942

LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR—Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass.

THE PLIGHT of the PROFESSIONAL MUSICIAN

N.Y. Times Sept. 13. - 42

And Why He Is Opposed to the Uncontrolled Distribution of the Records His Talents Create

The organized professional musician, representing the membership of the American Federation of Musicians of the U. S. and Canada, is refusing to make certain records except for the entertainment of our armed forces and for home use.

He has been forced to this stand because the strings and horns which once furnished him a livelihood have now become merely the instruments of his own destruction. Only by refusing to make records for uncontrolled distribution can he hope to survive.

He is not unpatriotic, or desirous of obstructing progress. He is not a conspirator seeking restraint of trade. He is not guilty of the other crimes ascribed to him by the uninformed.

The A. F. of M. numbers approximately 138,000 members. Their musical talent has been developed by long years of study and practice. They are completely devoted to our country's cause. 10% are in our armed forces, a high average. They rank high as blood donors, war bond and stamp buyers, volunteers in civilian service. They are cheerfully donating their services gratis to our armed forces.

And yet only 35% now are steadily employed. This despite the fact that music today is being enjoyed by millions, while previously it was heard only by thousands.

Do you know that 95% of the music heard today in the U. S. and Canada is "canned"? (made on records)—that only the remaining 5% is played by the living musician?

And do you know that the greatest contributing factor to this situation is the musical "robot"—the record?

Is not the musician, then, justified in saying: "I will make no more records until and unless honest negotiation provides a solution by which the public may continue to enjoy the product of our time and labor, and I may continue to work and earn a living?"

Now hear the facts about the music record industry and the relation of the musician to this industry.

There are approximately 800 radio stations in the U. S. Over 500 of these do not employ one single living musician. They operate exclusively on recorded music.

There are approximately 500,000 coin-operated juke boxes in our country. The total income from this one source alone is around $150,000,000 annually.

An average of only 7 minutes of each 24 hours of radio time is given to "live" music.

Hundreds of millions in advertising income is received by these radio stations from the sale of "canned music" to commercial programs. This huge total is derived from the records which the professional musicians create. But the total income received by the musicians who make this profitable radio industry possible approximates an insignificant fraction of this total. As the number of stations increases, the employment of living musicians in this field is actually decreasing.

Tonight you can relax comfortably in your favorite chair beside your radio. A touch of the knob and the musical talent of the world will be yours. Or in a nearby tavern a nickel in the juke box will bring you your favorite band leader or singer.

But will you stop to think that there may come an evening, not too far distant, when you may find this privilege gone?

Why? Because the talent which produces this entertainment is in grave danger of being destroyed by the very instrument it is called upon to produce.

Is it not reasonable then to ask for a fair and sensible solution which will permit you to continue to enjoy, and permit us to continue to live?

Is it not fair and just that the recording and radio industry, earning big financial rewards from the talent and skill of the musician, should sustain the obligation of affording him, by some compromise, the opportunity to maintain a decent standard of living—so that music may survive?

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold is seeking an injunction to restrain us from refusing to make records.

Would it not have been more just, before seeking legal restraint, first to give us the opportunity to present the facts fully?

We welcome a complete and impartial investigation which might suggest some equitable legislation as now exists in England, and prevent radio stations and juke box operators from regularly playing the records bearing the phrase, "For home use only."

Yet not one recording or transcription company has approached our Federation with any suggestions to meet the problem. Instead they have seemingly combined with the radio stations and advertising interests to influence Washington to fight their battles for them.

The unthinking and uninformed are too often misled into believing that the fault lies with the President of our International, James C. Petrillo, who has been subjected to much unjust criticism.

The fact is that Brother Petrillo is but carrying out the unanimous decision of our International Executive Board. The latter, in turn, is carrying out the unanimous decision of the 518 duly elected delegates who attended our 46th National Convention—which expressed the will of our entire membership.

That is why Local 802, with a membership of over 21,000, wholeheartedly supports our International President and our International Executive Board.

Justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make "canned music" for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job.

Justice demands that the canned music industry should not force our members on the relief rolls—together with implications against our patriotism.

These are the facts. And we are confident that you, the public, will sympathize with our position, and our plight.

Executive Board
ASSOCIATED MUSICIANS OF GREATER NEW YORK
LOCAL 802
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF MUSICIANS

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

SEP 22 1942

Broadway

By DANTON WALKER

... Pleasure cars will be off the roads in Canada by next spring . . . The New York Public Library is being profiled in the Saturday Evening Post by Jack Alexander . . . If Ford signs Serge Koussevitzky for a network show, the last holdout in the symphony field, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be compelled to join the American Federation of Musicians. The union has kept the organization off the air so far.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

SEP 15 1942

PETRILLO GAGS ANOTHER BAND

Eastman School Concerts Ordered Off the Air.

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 15.—Broadcasts by the Eastman School of Music will be kept off the air from now on by the policy of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, it was announced today by Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the school.

Among the 120 instrumentalists in the Eastman School Symphony Orchestra are students who, as non-members of Petrillo's union, fall under his radio broadcast ban. The situation is similar to that which caused the ban last week on broadcasts by the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and the earlier one on broadcasts by the student group of the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich.

The Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra and the Rochester Civic Orchestra do not come under the ban, Dr. Hanson said, and will be heard in a broadcast series of concerts beginning in October. Dr. Hanson explained that the members of both these orchestras, some of them advanced students at the, school belong to the Petrillo union. The Eastman-Rochester Symphony records for Victor.

Hanson Compromise.

Dr. Hanson said that he had a suggestion which he had not outlined either to broadcasting companies or union officials, which might provide a solution. He said his plan would be a dual system that would limit the number of concerts by students to protect the union from competition and give listeners a chance to hear both professional organizations and those of outstanding students.

Dr. Hanson, who has been director of the Eastman School of Music for twenty years, established its American composers' concerts and its Festival of American Music, which are widely known through the radio.

Three engagements to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in one of his own compositions were canceled by Dr. Hanson last December because the musicians' union forbade him to appear with a non-union orchestra. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, conducted the Hanson composition.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

SEP 20 1942

THE CINCINNATI . . . Conservatory was scheduled to begin its ninth season of broadcast concerts on October 1st over the Columbia network. The music students of the school have given 220 broadcasts since they first went on the air eight years ago. The Eastman School of Music has a student symphony orchestra of 120 instrumentalists and most of them are amateurs and not union musicians. Therefore the orchestra is barred from the air by Petrillo. He will permit the broadcast concerts by the Eastman Rochester Symphony orchestra and the Rochester Civic orchestra, because the 60 members of the two orchestras are members of the union altho most of them are advanced students at the school. Dr. Howard Hanson is director of the Eastman School and orchestras and last winter Petrillo refused to permit him to conduct performances of three of his own works with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

BUTTE, MONT.
MONTANA STANDARD

SEP 25 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!
From the New York World-Telegram

Rochester has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down.

TIME
CHICAGO, ILL.
9/7/42

MUSIC

Fine Italian Hand

Labor's New Order in music continued its efforts to force the union label on the Boston Symphony Orchestra last week. From musical Rochester, N.Y. came word that the only major non-union orchestra in the U.S. will not play its annual December concert at Rochester's Eastman Theater this year. Reason: a threatened boycott of the theater by all union musicians.

This is not the first threat. In Springfield, Mass. two ominously polite letters last month told the committee in charge of the Municipal Auditorium that if the Boston Symphony plays there next winter, American Federation of Musicians members will blacklist the hall. In Northampton, Mass. an A.F. of M. official announced that Smith College will be blacklisted if the Boston orchestra plays there.

The threats came from minor officials, but their fine Italian handwriting looked suspiciously like that of A.F. of M.'s big boss, James C. (for Caesar) Petrillo. Ever since he became tsar of U.S. musicians, ex-Trumpeter Petrillo has considered the patrician Boston Symphony one of the chief thorns in his sensitive side. Union pressure has kept the Boston orchestra from broadcasting since 1939. Two years ago Petrillo forced RCA-Victor to stop recording the Boston Symphony, then exulted: "They're through!"

But the orchestra may not be able to buck Petrillo's New Order much longer. In Boston, orchestra and union officials were at last getting together. In Manhattan, many a musician was betting that Boston Symphony players will never again enter Carnegie Hall without union cards.

Meanwhile James Caesar Petrillo had another battle on his hands. Next fortnight the Government hopes to slap an injunction on Petrillo to end his boycott against recordings. On hand to push the Government's case will be Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold. So far Trust-Buster Arnold has had no great success in his brushes with organized labor. But this time he has popular opinion behind him. A Gallup Poll question, "Do you approve or disapprove of the Government taking legal action to stop Petrillo?" turned up a 73% chorus of ayes.

BOSTON, MASS.
RECORD

SEP 15 1942

NEW SEASON OF SYMPHONY

A symphony by Tikhon Khrennikov, eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, October 9.

Serge Koussevitzky, beginning his nineteenth season as the conductor of the Boston Symphony, has announced the new Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch for the opening program, in which he is also going to include the Second Symphony of Beethoven.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
EVENING NEWS PRESS

SEP 18 1942

LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR—Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass.

THE PLIGHT of the PROFESSIONAL MUSICIAN

N.Y. Times Sept. 13. - 42

And Why He Is Opposed to the Uncontrolled Distribution of the Records His Talents Create

The organized professional musician, representing the membership of the American Federation of Musicians of the U. S. and Canada, is refusing to make certain records except for the entertainment of our armed forces and for home use.

He has been forced to this stand because the strings and horns which once furnished him a livelihood have now become merely the instruments of his own destruction. Only by refusing to make records for uncontrolled distribution can he hope to survive.

He is not unpatriotic, or desirous of obstructing progress. He is not a conspirator seeking restraint of trade. He is not guilty of the other crimes ascribed to him by the uninformed.

The A. F. of M. numbers approximately 138,000 members. Their musical talent has been developed by long years of study and practice. They are completely devoted to our country's cause. 10% are in our armed forces, a high average. They rank high as blood donors, war bond and stamp buyers, volunteers in civilian service. They are cheerfully donating their services gratis to our armed forces.

And yet only 35% now are steadily employed. This despite the fact that music today is being enjoyed by millions, while previously it was heard only by thousands.

Do you know that 95% of the music heard today in the U. S. and Canada is "canned"? (made on records)—that only the remaining 5% is played by the living musician?

And do you know that the greatest contributing factor to this situation is the musical "robot"—the record?

Is not the musician, then, justified in saying: "I will make no more records until and unless honest negotiation provides a solution by which the public may continue to enjoy the product of our time and labor, and I may continue to work and earn a living?"

Now hear the facts about the music record industry and the relation of the musician to this industry.

There are approximately 800 radio stations in the U. S. Over 500 of these do not employ one single living musician. They operate exclusively on recorded music.

There are approximately 500,000 coin-operated juke boxes in our country. The total income from this one source alone is around $150,000,000 annually.

An average of only 7 minutes of each 24 hours of radio time is given to "live" music.

Hundreds of millions in advertising income is received by these radio stations from the sale of "canned music" to commercial programs. This huge total is derived from the records which the professional musicians create. But the total income received by the musicians who make this profitable radio industry possible approximates an insignificant fraction of this total. As the number of stations increases, the employment of living musicians in this field is actually decreasing.

Tonight you can relax comfortably in your favorite chair beside your radio. A touch of the knob and the musical talent of the world will be yours. Or in a nearby tavern a nickel in the juke box will bring you your favorite band leader or singer.

But will you stop to think that there may come an evening, not too far distant, when you may find this privilege gone?

Why? Because the talent which produces this entertainment is in grave danger of being destroyed by the very instrument it is called upon to produce.

Is it not reasonable then to ask for a fair and sensible solution which will permit you to continue to enjoy, and permit us to continue to live?

Is it not fair and just that the recording and radio industry, earning big financial rewards from the talent and skill of the musician, should sustain the obligation of affording him, by some compromise, the opportunity to maintain a decent standard of living—so that music may survive?

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold is seeking an injunction to restrain us from refusing to make records.

Would it not have been more just, before seeking legal restraint, first to give us the opportunity to present the facts fully?

We welcome a complete and impartial investigation which might suggest some equitable legislation as now exists in England, and prevent radio stations and juke box operators from regularly playing the records bearing the phrase, "For home use only."

Yet not one recording or transcription company has approached our Federation with any suggestions to meet the problem. Instead they have seemingly combined with the radio stations and advertising interests to influence Washington to fight their battles for them.

The unthinking and uninformed are too often misled into believing that the fault lies with the President of our International, James C. Petrillo, who has been subjected to much unjust criticism.

The fact is that Brother Petrillo is but carrying out the unanimous decision of our International Executive Board. The latter, in turn, is carrying out the unanimous decision of the 518 duly elected delegates who attended our 46th National Convention—which expressed the will of our entire membership.

That is why Local 802, with a membership of over 21,000, wholeheartedly supports our International President and our International Executive Board.

Justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make "canned music" for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job.

Justice demands that the canned music industry should not force our members on the relief rolls—together with implications against our patriotism.

These are the facts. And we are confident that you, the public, will sympathize with our position, and our plight.

Executive Board
ASSOCIATED MUSICIANS OF GREATER NEW YORK
LOCAL 802
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF MUSICIANS

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD

SEP 22 1942

Broadway

By DANTON WALKER

. . . Pleasure cars will be off the roads in Canada by next spring . . . The New York Public Library is being profiled in the Saturday Evening Post by Jack Alexander . . . If Ford signs Serge Koussevitzky for a network show, the last holdout in the symphony [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be compelled to join the American Federation of Musicians. The union has kept the organization off the air so far.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

SEP 15 1942

PETRILLO GAGS ANOTHER BAND

Eastman School Concerts Ordered Off the Air.

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 15.—Broadcasts by the Eastman School of Music will be kept off the air from now on by the policy of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, it was announced today by Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the school.

Among the 120 instrumentalists in the Eastman School Symphony Orchestra are students who, as non-members of Petrillo's union, fall under his radio broadcast ban. The situation is similar to that which caused the ban last week on broadcasts by the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and the earlier one on broadcasts by the student group of the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich.

The Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra and the Rochester Civic Orchestra do not come under the ban, Dr. Hanson said, and will be heard in a broadcast series of concerts beginning in October. Dr. Hanson explained that the members of both these orchestras, some of them advanced students at the school belong to the Petrillo union. The Eastman-Rochester Symphony records for Victor.

Hanson Compromise.

Dr. Hanson said that he had a suggestion which he had not outlined either to broadcasting companies or union officials, which might provide a solution. He said his plan would be a dual system that would limit the number of concerts by students to protect the union from competition and give listeners a chance to hear both professional organizations and those of outstanding students.

Dr. Hanson, who has been director of the Eastman School of Music for twenty years, established its American composers' concerts and its Festival of American Music, which are widely known through the radio.

Three engagements to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in one of his own compositions were canceled by Dr. Hanson last December because the musicians' union forbade him to appear with a non-union orchestra. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, conducted the Hanson composition.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

SEP 20 1942

THE CINCINNATI . . . Conservatory was scheduled to begin its ninth season of broadcast concerts on October 1st over the Columbia network. The music students of the school have given 220 broadcasts since they first went on the air eight years ago. The Eastman School of Music has a student symphony orchestra of 120 instrumentalists and most of them are amateurs and not union musicians. Therefore the orchestra is barred from the air by Petrillo. He will permit the broadcast concerts by the Eastman Rochester Symphony orchestra and the Rochester Civic orchestra, because the 60 members of the two orchestras are members of the union altho most of them are advanced students at the school. Dr. Howard Hanson is director of the Eastman School and orchestras and last winter Petrillo refused to permit him to conduct performances of three of his own works with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

BUTTE, MONT.
MONTANA STANDARD

SEP 25 1942

AGAIN, GREAT CAESAR!
From the New York World-Telegram

Rochester has cancelled its annual date with the Boston Symphony orchestra for [illegible] reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Music hath charms. But Mr. Petrillo, with few charms, hath power. Music must be taught its place in a unionized era. Pianissimo! Pipe down.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

SEP 17 1942

Musicians' Local 802 Votes Support of Petrillo

The membership of Local 802, of the American Federation of Musicians, has unanimously ratified a resolution of its executive committee supporting the action of the federation's president, James C. Petrillo, in banning members from making transcriptions and recordings.

This was announced Tuesday by the local's secretary, William Feinberg, who said the membership indorsement was voted at a meeting Monday afternoon in Palm Garden, 306 West Fifty-second Street. He said that about 1,000 musicians attended the meeting.

It was also learned that Carnegie Hall, home of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, has been placed on the union's "unfair list" but subsequently had been restored to the "fair list" pending outcome of the federation's negotiations with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston organization, only large non-union orchestra in the country, has a contract with Carnegie Hall.

indorsement was voted at a meeting Monday afternoon in Palm Garden, 306 West Fifty-second Street. He said that about 1,000 musicians attended the meeting.

It was also learned that Carnegie Hall, home of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, has been placed on the union's "unfair list" but subsequently had been restored to the "fair list" pending outcome of the federation's negotiations with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston organization, only large non-union orchestra in the country, has a contract with Carnegie Hall.

FORBES
NEW YORK CITY

OCT 1 - 1942

An American Caesar

"Rochester has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians," the newspapers record. Another ukase by this same Caesar threatens disaster, according to Washington authorities, to some 40% of the nation's radio broadcasting stations, thus gravely interfering with the adequate dissemination of war information, says Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information. U. S. Army bands also have been brought under rigid domination by Private Citizen Petrillo. He tells them when they may play, when they may not play.

Fantastic? Yes. But true.

This is but one tragic consequence of the Administration's unconscionable coddling of organized labor. Between now and November Congress is little likely to clamp down on such flagrant un-Americanism, such flouting of Constitutional American freedom. An outraged public can be depended upon, however, to compel Congress to act—"after the election."

★

Faith and work can work wonders.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

OCT 5 - 1942

Boston Board Fears Union Symphony

By the United Press.

BOSTON, Oct. 5.—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra said last night they doubted that the 62-year-old orchestra could "maintain its musical integrity" if its members joined the James C. Petrillo's AFL American Federation of Musicians under that group's existing bylaws. The Boston orchestra is the only nonunion group among the nation's major symphony orchestras.

Jerome D. Greene, president of the trustees, objected rules limiting the hiring and firing of orchestra members. Existing laws, he said, did not give the orchestra the freedom to maintain its own standards of operation.

"If those bylaws were amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards," the trustees concluded, "our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 16 1942

MUSICIANS HERE BACK PETRILLO BAN

Local 802 Votes the 'Fullest Confidence' in Leader in His Action on Recordings

FIRST SUCH ENDORSEMENT

Resolution Cites Widespread Unemployment Caused by 'Canned Music'

The membership of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians has indorsed unanimously the fight of James C. Petrillo, federation president, against recorded music and voted its "fullest confidence" in his leadership, it was announced yesterday by the local.

The local's action had been expected but the vote was the first expression of opinion by any of the federation's members since the union's ban on recordings took effect on Aug. 1 and the Department of Justice started its anti-trust suit against the organization. The vote was taken at a membership meeting Monday evening in Palm Garden, 306 West Fifty-second Street, attended by a thousand musicians.

Text of Resolution

The resolution adopted by the local follows:

Whereas widespread unemployment exists amongst the musicians in our country, resulting in increasing hardship and misery to thousands of our fellow-members and their families, and

Whereas, one of the most potent causes for this widespread unemployment is the rapid and increasing introduction of mechanical and canned music, which in many instances displaces the live musician from his former place of employment and in others denies him opportunity for employment where same would otherwise prevail, and

Whereas, only a comparatively few musicians are employed in the making of records and transcriptions which thereafter are used by the recording companies and the radio stations for the displacement of much larger numbers of musicians from employment, and

Whereas, it is precisely the skill and art of the musician, developed after years of sacrifice and struggle, which are exploited by the recording companies and radio stations to their great financial benefit, and

Whereas, it is only meet and proper that every industry should provide decent living standards for those who make the industry possible, and

Whereas, in an effort to regulate and control the introduction of mechanical robots so that the least possible injury shall be occasioned to our fellow-musicians, our International Executive Board, under the leadership of our National President, James C. Petrillo, enforcing the will of the Convention of our A. F. of M. held in June, 1941, at Seattle, Washington, as unanimously approved by the 518 delegates attendant thereat, has decided that the membership of the American Federation of Musicians shall cease making records and transcriptions, emphasizing at the same time, however, that such decision shall in no wise be used to curtail musical entertainment to our armed forces, thus once more evidencing complete devotion of the membership of our International to our country's cause in the war which has been forced upon us by the Axis-Fascist aggressors, and

Whereas, said decision of our International Executive Board was made in the hope and for the purpose of inducing the recording companies and radio broadcasters to negotiate and agree upon a plan under which not only they may continue to function and prosper, but which would also provide employment opportunities for greater numbers of our fellow-members,

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the executive Board of Local 802, largest local of our International, in meeting duly assembled this 13th day of August, 1942, does express its fullest confidence in our International Executive Board and our President, Brother James C. Petrillo, and does pledge itself to exert every effort to carry out the decision above referred to, to the end that the greatest possible number of our members may be restored once more to gainful employment.

Carnegie Hall in Row

It was learned meanwhile that Carnegie Hall, home of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and scene of many outstanding musical events, had been drawn into the controversy over Mr. Petrillo's battles against non-union musicians.

On June 30 the hall was placed on the local's "unfair list," according to the union, because it would not agree to let the premises be used only by union musicians. A permanent listing as "unfair" would have meant the Philharmonic could not have played at Carnegie. The hall's position was dictated by the fact that it has a lease with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, which is the only important non-union symphony in the country.

Mr. Petrillo subsequently restored Carnegie Hall to the "fair list" pending the outcome of the current negotiations between the Boston Symphony's management and the federation. The negotiations are expected to result in the unionization of the Boston group.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

SEP 16 1942

Injunction Against Petrillo To Be Sought At Hearing Today

Government Would Restrain Czar Of Musicians Union From Enforcing Recently Instituted Ban On Recordings And Transcriptions

By ROBERT GRAY

To say that the eyes and ears of the broadcasting and music industries will be trained on Chicago today would be putting it mildly. For today is when motions are to be heard in connection with the action brought by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice against James Caesar Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians. Scene of action is Federal Court in the Windy City.

With Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general and the department's trust-busting expert, to appear personally, the Department of Justice will seek a temporary injunction restraining Mr. Petrillo from enforcing his recently instituted ban on music recordings and transcriptions.

If the injunction is granted, union musicians will be expected to resume displaying their talents on wax. If not, Mr. Petrillo will continue to have radio and all branches of the movie industry under his thumb as far as recordings and transcriptions are involved.

Tommy Dorsey

While there is something to be said on both sides of the Petrillo ban on recordings — his expressed reason is that such a move will create more jobs for union musicians throughout the country — the czar of the musicians union has provoked considerable public wrath by such show of dictatorial power as banning the Interlochen, Mich., youth orchestra from the air; refusal to allow the enlisted men's orchestra of "This Is the Army" show to perform at a canteen opening in New York, threatening to blacklist college and municipal auditoriums in which the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play.

The ban on transcriptions for one-time broadcast use will go hard eventually with individual stations which use commercial transcribed serials and other shows, although a good supply is said to have been prepared in advance to meet just such a situation as now exists.

* * *

A LOT OF LISTENERS see in the stoppage of transcriptions a welcomed relief from the many silly transcribed announcements on the air.

"Thank heaven for Mr. Petrillo if his extended ban will take transcribed commercials — 'family dramas, jingles' and the like off the air,' writes Ernest E. Akins of Memphis. "But it sounds much too good to be true. I could most sincerely forgive him for whatever else he might do that is not in the 'interest' of other recordings."

Of course, Mr. Akins and other listeners should remember that transcribed dramas and jingles can be made without use of music, and the present ban is no insurance for tortured ears.

The Chicago injunction hearing, originally set several weeks ago and postponed until today at Government counsel's request, may not result in a decision today or immediately. But the entire Nation will be affected, as far as music is concerned, by the outcome. Boiled down, the issue is whether one man can dictate to Americans what recorded and transcribed music they can hear over the radio, juke boxes or other reproduction facilities.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

OCT 5 - 1942

Seeks AFL Affiliation

BOSTON, Oct. 5 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, sole major non-union orchestra in the country, disclosed yesterday it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) concerning union recognition.

The orchestra has been barred in recent years from making radio broadcasts on phonograph records because its players do not belong to the union.

properties owned, controlled or operated by them.

The subsidiaries are:

Savannah Electric & Power Co.; Gulf States Utilities Co.; Baton Rouge Bus Co., Inc.; El Paso Electric Co. (Del.), El Paso Electric Co. (Texas), El Paso & Juarez Traction Co., El Paso Natural Gas Co. and Engineers Public Service Co., Inc., the latter being the mutual service company in Engineers' holding system which in the past rendered advisory and consultative services to all companies in the system.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 16 1942

MUSICIANS HERE BACK PETRILLO BAN

Local 802 Votes the 'Fullest Confidence' in Leader in His Action on Recordings

FIRST SUCH ENDORSEMENT

Resolution Cites Widespread Unemployment Caused by 'Canned Music'

The membership of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians has indorsed unanimously the fight of James C. Petrillo, federation president, against recorded music and voted its "fullest confidence" in his leadership, it was announced yesterday by the local.

The local's action had been expected but the vote was the first expression of opinion by any of the federation's members since the union's ban on recordings took effect on Aug. 1 and the Department of Justice started its anti-trust suit against the organization. The vote was taken at a membership meeting Monday evening in Palm Garden, 306 West Fifty-second Street, attended by a thousand musicians.

Text of Resolution

The resolution adopted by the local follows:

Whereas widespread unemployment exists amongst the musicians in our country, resulting in increasing hardship and misery to thousands of our fellow-members and their families, and

Whereas, one of the most potent causes for this widespread unemployment is the rapid and increasing introduction of mechanical and canned music, which in many instances displaces the live musician from his former place of employment and in others denies him opportunity for employment where same would otherwise prevail, and

Whereas, only a comparatively few musicians are employed in the making of records and transcriptions which thereafter are used by the recording companies and the radio stations for the displacement of much larger numbers of musicians from employment, and

Whereas, it is precisely the skill and art of the musician, developed after years of sacrifice and struggle, which are exploited by the recording companies and radio stations to their great financial benefit, and

Whereas, it is only meet and proper that every industry should provide decent living standards for those who make the industry possible, and

Whereas, in an effort to regulate and control the introduction of mechanical robots so that the least possible injury shall be occasioned to our fellow-musicians, our International Executive Board, under the leadership of our National President, James C. Petrillo, enforcing the will of the Convention of our A. F. of M. held in June, 1941, at Seattle, Washington, as unanimously approved by the 518 delegates attendant thereat, has decided that the membership of the American Federation of Musicians shall cease making records and transcriptions, emphasizing at the same time, however, that such decision shall in no wise be used to curtail musical entertainment to our armed forces, thus once more evidencing complete devotion of the membership of our International to our country's cause in the war which has been forced upon us by the Axis-Fascist aggressors, and

Whereas, said decision of our International Executive Board was made in the hope and for the purpose of inducing the recording companies and radio broadcasters to negotiate and agree upon a plan under which not only they may continue to function and prosper, but which would also provide employment opportunities for greater numbers of our fellow-members,

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the executive Board of Local 802, largest local of our International, in meeting duly assembled this 13th day of August, 1942, does express its fullest confidence in our International Executive Board and our President, Brother James C. Petrillo, and does pledge itself to exert every effort to carry out the decision above referred to, to the end that the greatest possible number of our members may be restored once more to gainful employment.

Carnegie Hall in Row

It was learned meanwhile that Carnegie Hall, home of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and scene of many outstanding musical events, had been drawn into the controversy over Mr. Petrillo's battles against non-union musicians.

On June 30 the hall was placed on the local's "unfair list," according to the union, because it would not agree to let the premises be used only by union musicians. A permanent listing as "unfair" would have meant the Philharmonic could not have played at Carnegie. The hall's position was dictated by the fact that it has a lease with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, which is the only important non-union symphony in the country.

Mr. Petrillo subsequently restored Carnegie Hall to the "fair list" pending the outcome of the current negotiations between the Boston Symphony's management and the federation. The negotiations are expected to result in the unionization of the Boston group.

Votes Support of Petrillo

1,000 Reported at Session; Action Is Unanimous

The membership of Local 802, of the American Federation of Musicians, has unanimously ratified a resolution of its executive committee supporting the action of the federation's president, James C. Petrillo, in banning members from making transcriptions and recordings.

This was announced yesterday by the local's secretary, William Feinberg, who said the membership indorsement was voted at a meeting Monday afternoon in Palm Garden, 306 West Fifty-second Street. He said that about 1,000 musicians attended the meeting.

It was also learned that Carnegie Hall, home of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, has been placed on the union's "unfair list" but subsequently had been restored to the "fair list" pending outcome of the federation's negotiations with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston organization, only large non-union orchestra in the country, has a contract with Carnegie Hall.

FORBES
NEW YORK CITY

OCT 1 - 1942

An American Caesar

"Rochester has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians," the newspapers record. Another ukase by this same Caesar threatens disaster, according to Washington authorities, to some 40% of the nation's radio broadcasting stations, thus gravely interfering with the adequate dissemination of war information, says Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information. U. S. Army bands also have been brought under rigid domination by Private Citizen Petrillo. He tells them when they may play, when they may not play.

Fantastic? Yes. But true.

This is but one tragic consequence of the Administration's unconscionable coddling of organized labor. Between now and November Congress is little likely to clamp down on such flagrant un-Americanism, such flouting of Constitutional American freedom. An outraged public can be depended upon, however, to compel Congress to act—"after the election."

★

Faith and work can work wonders.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

OCT 5 - 1942

Boston Board Fears Union Symphony

By the United Press.

BOSTON, Oct. 5.—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra said last night they doubted that the 62-year-old orchestra could "maintain its musical integrity" if its members joined the James C. Petrillo's AFL American Federation of Musicians under that group's existing bylaws. The Boston orchestra is the only nonunion group among the nation's major symphony orchestras.

Jerome D. Greene, president of the trustees, objected rules limiting the hiring and firing of orchestra members. Existing laws, he said, did not give the orchestra the freedom to maintain its own standards of operation.

"If those bylaws were amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards," the trustees concluded, "our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

SEP 16 1942

Injunction Against Petrillo To Be Sought At Hearing Today

Government Would Restrain Czar Of Musicians Union From Enforcing Recently Instituted Ban On Recordings And Transcriptions

By ROBERT GRAY

To say that the eyes and ears of the broadcasting and music industries will be trained on Chicago today would be putting it mildly. For today is when motions are to be heard in connection with the action brought by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice against James Caesar Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians. Scene of action is Federal Court in the Windy City.

With Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general and the department's trust-busting expert, to appear personally, the Department of Justice will seek a temporary injunction restraining Mr. Petrillo from enforcing his recently instituted ban on music recordings and transcriptions.

If the injunction is granted, union musicians will be expected to resume displaying their talents on wax. If not, Mr. Petrillo will continue to have radio and all branches of the movie industry under his thumb as far as recordings and transcriptions are involved.

Tommy Dorsey

While there is something to be said on both sides of the Petrillo ban on recordings — his expressed reason is that such a move will create more jobs for union musicians throughout the country — the czar of the musicians union has provoked considerable public wrath by such show of dictatorial power as banning the Interlochen, Mich., youth orchestra from the air; refusal to allow the enlisted men's orchestra of "This Is the Army" show to perform at a canteen opening in New York, threatening to blacklist college and municipal auditoriums in which the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play.

The ban on transcriptions for one-time broadcast use will go hard eventually with individual stations which use commercial transcribed serials and other shows, although a good supply is said to have been prepared in advance to meet just such a situation as now exists.

* * *

A LOT OF LISTENERS see in the stoppage of transcriptions a welcomed relief from the many silly transcribed announcements on the air.

"Thank heaven for Mr. Petrillo if his extended ban will take transcribed commercials — 'family dramas, jingles' and the like off the air,' writes Ernest E. Akins of Memphis. "But it sounds much too good to be true. I could most sincerely forgive him for whatever else he might do that is not in the 'interest' of other recordings."

Of course, Mr. Akins and other listeners should remember that transcribed dramas and jingles can be made without use of music, and the present ban is no insurance for tortured ears.

The Chicago injunction hearing, originally set several weeks ago and postponed until today at Government counsel's request, may not result in a decision today or immediately. But the entire Nation will be affected, as far as music is concerned, by the outcome. Boiled down, the issue is whether one man can dictate to Americans what recorded and transcribed music they can hear over the radio, juke boxes or other reproduction facilities.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

OCT 5 - 1942

Seeks AFL Affiliation

BOSTON, Oct. 5 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, sole major non-union orchestra in the country, disclosed yesterday it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) concerning union recognition.

The orchestra has been barred in recent years from making radio broadcasts on phonograph records because its players do not belong to the union.

NEW YORK

...t De Pinna

Salvage Chief Admits War Scrap Is Being Retained to Meet Shortage of Parts

...Local Bans ...llo Fight on Recordings

James C. Petrillo, president o the American Federation of Musicians, AFL affiliate, had a vote of confidence today from 1,000 members of Local 802 here in his fight to ban recorded music over the radio.

Union officials also predicted that Petrillo would be successful in winning the unionization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the only large remaining non-union symphony in the country.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 16 1942

MUSICIANS HERE BACK PETRILLO BAN

Local 802 Votes the 'Fullest Confidence' in Leader in His Action on Recordings

FIRST SUCH ENDORSEMENT

Resolution Cites Widespread Unemployment Caused by 'Canned Music'

The membership of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians has indorsed unanimously the fight of James C. Petrillo, federation president, against recorded music and voted its "fullest confidence" in his leadership, it was announced yesterday by the local.

The local's action had been expected but the vote was the first expression of opinion by any of the federation's members since the union's ban on recordings took effect on Aug. 1 and the Department of Justice started its anti-trust suit against the organization. The vote was taken at a membership meeting Monday evening in Palm Garden, 306 West Fifty-second Street, attended by a thousand musicians.

Text of Resolution

The resolution adopted by the local follows:

Whereas widespread unemployment exists amongst the musicians in our country, resulting in increasing hardship and misery to thousands of our fellow-members and their families, and

Whereas, one of the most potent causes for this widespread unemployment is the rapid and increasing introduction of mechanical and canned music, which in many instances displaces the live musician from his former place of employment and in others denies him opportunity for employment where same would otherwise prevail, and

Whereas, only a comparatively few musicians are employed in the making of records and transcriptions which thereafter are used by the recording companies and the radio stations for the displacement of much larger numbers of musicians from employment, and

Whereas, it is precisely the skill and art of the musician, developed after years of sacrifice and struggle, which are exploited by the recording companies and radio stations to their great financial benefit, and

Whereas, it is only meet and proper that every industry should provide decent living standards for those who make the industry possible, and

Whereas, in an effort to regulate and control the introduction of mechanical robots so that the least possible injury shall be occasioned to our fellow-musicians, our International Executive Board, under the leadership of our National President, James C. Petrillo, enforcing the will of the Convention of our A. F. of M. held in June, 1941, at Seattle, Washington, as unanimously approved by the 518 delegates attendant thereat, has decided that the membership of the American Federation of Musicians shall cease making records and transcriptions, emphasizing at the same time, however, that such decision shall in no wise be used to curtail musical entertainment to our armed forces, thus once more evidencing complete devotion of the membership of our International to our country's cause in the war which has been forced upon us by the Axis-Fascist aggressors, and

Whereas, said decision of our International Executive Board was made in the hope and for the purpose of inducing the recording companies and radio broadcasters to negotiate and agree upon a plan under which not only they may continue to function and prosper, but which would also provide employment opportunities for greater numbers of our fellow-members,

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the executive Board of Local 802, largest local of our International, in meeting duly assembled this 13th day of August, 1942, does express its fullest confidence in our International Executive Board and our President, Brother James C. Petrillo, and does pledge itself to exert every effort to carry out the decision above referred to, to the end that the greatest possible number of our members may be restored once more to gainful employment.

Carnegie Hall in Row

It was learned meanwhile that Carnegie Hall, home of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and scene of many outstanding musical events, had been drawn into the controversy over Mr. Petrillo's battles against non-union musicians.

On June 30 the hall was placed on the local's "unfair list," according to the union, because it would not agree to let the premises be used only by union musicians. A permanent listing as "unfair" would have meant the Philharmonic could not have played at Carnegie. The hall's position was dictated by the fact that it has a lease with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, which is the only important non-union symphony in the country.

Mr. Petrillo subsequently restored Carnegie Hall to the "fair list" pending the outcome of the current negotiations between the Boston Symphony's management and the federation. The negotiations are expected to result in the unionization of the Boston group.

FORBES
NEW YORK CITY

OCT 1 - 1942

An American Caesar

"Rochester has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians," the newspapers record. Another ukase by this same Caesar threatens disaster, according to Washington authorities, to some 40% of the nation's radio broadcasting stations, thus gravely interfering with the adequate dissemination of war information, says Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information. U. S. Army bands also have been brought under rigid domination by Private Citizen Petrillo. He tells them when they may play, when they may not play.

Fantastic? Yes. But true.

This is but one tragic consequence of the Administration's unconscionable coddling of organized labor. Between now and November Congress is little likely to clamp down on such flagrant un-Americanism, such flouting of Constitutional American freedom. An outraged public can be depended upon, however, to compel Congress to act—"after the election."

★

Faith and work can work wonders.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

OCT 5 - 1942

Boston Board Fears Union Symphony

By the United Press.

BOSTON, Oct. 5.—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra said last night they doubted that the 62-year-old orchestra could "maintain its musical integrity" if its members joined the James C. Petrillo's AFL American Federation of Musicians under that group's existing bylaws. The Boston orchestra is the only nonunion group among the nation's major symphony orchestras.

Jerome D. Greene, president of the trustees, objected rules limiting the hiring and firing of orchestra members. Existing laws, he said, did not give the orchestra the freedom to maintain its own standards of operation.

"If those bylaws were amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards," the trustees concluded, "our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

SEP 16 1942

Injunction Against Petrillo To Be Sought At Hearing Today

Government Would Restrain Czar Of Musicians Union From Enforcing Recently Instituted Ban On Recordings And Transcriptions

By ROBERT GRAY

To say that the eyes and ears of the broadcasting and music industries will be trained on Chicago today would be putting it mildly. For today is when motions are to be heard in connection with the action brought by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice against James Caesar Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians. Scene of action is Federal Court in the Windy City.

With Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general and the department's trust-busting expert, to appear personally, the Department of Justice will seek a temporary injunction restraining Mr. Petrillo from enforcing his recently instituted ban on music recordings and transcriptions.

If the injunction is granted, union musicians will be expected to resume displaying their talents on wax. If not, Mr. Petrillo will continue to have radio and all branches of the movie industry under his thumb as far as recordings and transcriptions are involved.

Tommy Dorsey

While there is something to be said on both sides of the Petrillo ban on recordings — his expressed reason is that such a move will create more jobs for union musicians throughout the country — the czar of the musicians union has provoked considerable public wrath by such show of dictatorial power as banning the Interlochen, Mich., youth orchestra from the air; refusal to allow the enlisted men's orchestra of "This Is the Army" show to perform at a canteen opening in New York, threatening to blacklist college and municipal auditoriums in which the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play.

The ban on transcriptions for one-time broadcast use will go hard eventually with individual stations which use commercial transcribed serials and other shows, although a good supply is said to have been prepared in advance to meet just such a situation as now exists.

* * *

A LOT OF LISTENERS see in the stoppage of transcriptions a welcomed relief from the many silly transcribed announcements on the air.

"Thank heaven for Mr. Petrillo if his extended ban will take transcribed commercials — 'family dramas, jingles' and the like off the air,' writes Ernest E. Akins of Memphis. "But it sounds much too good to be true. I could most sincerely forgive him for whatever else he might do that is not in the 'interest' of other recordings."

Of course, Mr. Akins and other listeners should remember that transcribed dramas and jingles can be made without use of music, and the present ban is no insurance for tortured ears.

The Chicago injunction hearing, originally set several weeks ago and postponed until today at Government counsel's request, may not result in a decision today or immediately. But the entire Nation will be affected, as far as music is concerned, by the outcome. Boiled down, the issue is whether one man can dictate to Americans what recorded and transcribed music they can hear over the radio, juke boxes or other reproduction facilities.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

OCT 5 - 1942

Seeks AFL Affiliation

BOSTON, Oct. 5 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, sole major non-union orchestra in the country, disclosed yesterday it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) concerning union recognition.

The orchestra has been barred in recent years from making radio broadcasts on phonograph records because its players do not belong to the union.

NEW YORK ... De Pinna

Salvage Chief Admits Wastepaper Scrap Is Being Relinked to Meet Shortage of Pulp

...ter a strong educator, went ... the ... He

... Local Bans ...illo Fight on Recordings

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL affiliate, had a vote of confidence today from 1,000 members of Local 802 here in his fight to ban recorded music over the radio.

Union officials also predicted that Petrillo would be successful in winning the unionization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the only large remaining non-union symphony in the country.

FORBES
NEW YORK CITY
OCT 1 - 1942

An American Caesar

"Rochester has canceled its annual date with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for fear of reprisals from 'James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians,'" the newspapers record. Another ukase by this same Caesar threatens disaster, according to Washington authorities, to some 40% of the nation's radio broadcasting stations, thus gravely interfering with the adequate dissemination of war information, says Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information. U. S. Army bands also have been brought under rigid domination by Private Citizen Petrillo. He tells them when they may play, when they may not play.

Fantastic? Yes. But true.

This is but one tragic consequence of the Administration's unconscionable coddling of organized labor. Between now and November Congress is little likely to clamp down on such flagrant un-Americanism, such flouting of Constitutional American freedom. An outraged public can be depended upon, however, to compel Congress to act—"after the election."

★

Faith and work can work wonders.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
OCT 5 - 1942

Boston Board Fears Union Symphony

By the United Press.

BOSTON, Oct. 5.—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra said last night they doubted that the 62-year-old orchestra could "maintain its musical integrity" if its members joined the James C. Petrillo's AFL American Federation of Musicians under that group's existing bylaws. The Boston orchestra is the only nonunion group among the nation's major symphony orchestras.

Jerome D. Greene, president of the trustees, objected rules limiting the hiring and firing of orchestra members. Existing laws, he said, did not give the orchestra the freedom to maintain its own standards of operation.

"If those bylaws were amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards," the trustees concluded, "our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
SEP 16 1942

MUSICIANS HERE BACK PETRILLO BAN

Local 802 Votes the 'Fullest Confidence' in Leader in His Action on Recordings

FIRST SUCH ENDORSEMENT

Resolution Cites Widespread Unemployment Caused by 'Canned Music'

The membership of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians has indorsed unanimously the fight of James C. Petrillo, federation president, against recorded music and voted its "fullest confidence" in his leadership, it was announced yesterday by the local.

The local's action had been expected but the vote was the first expression of opinion by any of the federation's members since the union's ban on recordings took effect on Aug. 1 and the Department of Justice started its anti-trust suit against the organization. The vote was taken at a membership meeting Monday evening in Palm Garden, 306 West Fifty-second Street, attended by a thousand musicians.

Text of Resolution

The resolution adopted by the local follows:

Whereas widespread unemployment exists amongst the musicians in our country, resulting in increasing hardship and misery to thousands of our fellow-members and their families, and

Whereas, one of the most potent causes for this widespread unemployment is the rapid and increasing introduction of mechanical and canned music, which in many instances displaces the live musician from his former place of employment and in others denies him opportunity for employment where same would otherwise prevail, and

Whereas, only a comparatively few musicians are employed in the making of records and transcriptions which thereafter are used by the recording companies and the radio stations for the displacement of much larger numbers of musicians from employment, and

Whereas, it is precisely the skill and art of the musician, developed after years of sacrifice and struggle, which are exploited by the recording companies and radio stations to their great financial benefit, and

Whereas, it is only meet and proper that every industry should provide decent living standards for those who make the industry possible, and

Whereas, in an effort to regulate and control the introduction of mechanical robots so that the least possible injury shall be occasioned to our fellow-musicians, our International Executive Board, under the leadership of our National President, James C. Petrillo, enforcing the will of the Convention of our A. F. of M. held in June, 1941, at Seattle, Washington, as unanimously approved by the 518 delegates attendant thereat, has decided that the membership of the American Federation of Musicians shall cease making records and transcriptions, emphasizing at the same time, however, that such decision shall in no wise be used to curtail musical entertainment to our armed forces, thus once more evidencing complete devotion of the membership of our International to our country's cause in the war which has been forced upon us by the Axis-Fascist aggressors, and

Whereas, said decision of our International Executive Board was made in the hope and for the purpose of inducing the recording companies and radio broadcasters to negotiate and agree upon a plan under which not only they may continue to function and prosper, but which would also provide employment opportunities for greater numbers of our fellow-members,

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the executive Board of Local 802, largest local of our International, in meeting duly assembled this 13th day of August, 1942, does express its fullest confidence in our International Executive Board and our President, Brother James C. Petrillo, and does pledge itself to exert every effort to carry out the decision above referred to, to the end that the greatest possible number of our members may be restored once more to gainful employment.

Carnegie Hall in Row

It was learned meanwhile that Carnegie Hall, home of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and scene of many outstanding musical events, had been drawn into the controversy over Mr. Petrillo's battles against non-union musicians.

On June 30 the hall was placed on the local's "unfair list," according to the union, because it would not agree to let the premises be used only by union musicians. A permanent listing as "unfair" would have meant the Philharmonic could not have played at Carnegie. The hall's position was dictated by the fact that it has a lease with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, which is the only important non-union symphony in the country.

Mr. Petrillo subsequently restored Carnegie Hall to the "fair list" pending the outcome of the current negotiations between the Boston Symphony's management and the federation. The negotiations are expected to result in the unionization of the Boston group.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
SEP 16 1942

Injunction Against Petrillo To Be Sought At Hearing Today

Government Would Restrain Czar Of Musicians Union From Enforcing Recently Instituted Ban On Recordings And Transcriptions

By ROBERT GRAY

To say that the eyes and ears of the broadcasting and music industries will be trained on Chicago today would be putting it mildly. For today is when motions are to be heard in connection with the action brought by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice against James Caesar Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians. Scene of action is Federal Court in the Windy City.

With Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general and the department's trust-busting expert, to appear personally, the Department of Justice will seek a temporary injunction restraining Mr. Petrillo from enforcing his recently instituted ban on music recordings and transcriptions.

If the injunction is granted, union musicians will be expected to resume displaying their talents on wax. If not, Mr. Petrillo will continue to have radio and all branches of the movie industry under his thumb as far as recordings and transcriptions are involved.

Tommy Dorsey

While there is something to be said on both sides of the Petrillo ban on recordings — his expressed reason is that such a move will create more jobs for union musicians throughout the country — the czar of the musicians union has provoked considerable public wrath by such show of dictatorial power as banning the Interlochen, Mich., youth orchestra from the air; refusal to allow the enlisted men's orchestra of "This Is the Army" show to perform at a canteen opening in New York, threatening to blacklist college and municipal auditoriums in which the nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play.

The ban on transcriptions for one-time broadcast use will go hard eventually with individual stations which use commercial transcribed serials and other shows, although a good supply is said to have been prepared in advance to meet just such a situation as now exists.

* * *

A LOT OF LISTENERS see in the stoppage of transcriptions a welcomed relief from the many silly transcribed announcements on the air.

"Thank heaven for Mr. Petrillo if his extended ban will take transcribed commercials — 'family dramas, jingles' and the like off the air,' writes Ernest E. Akins of Memphis. "But it sounds much too good to be true. I could most sincerely forgive him for whatever else he might do that is not in the 'interest' of other recordings."

Of course, Mr. Akins and other listeners should remember that transcribed dramas and jingles can be made without use of music, and the present ban is no insurance for tortured ears.

The Chicago injunction hearing, originally set several weeks ago and postponed until today at Government counsel's request, may not result in a decision today or immediately. But the entire Nation will be affected, as far as music is concerned, by the outcome. Boiled down, the issue is whether one man can dictate to Americans what recorded and transcribed music they can hear over the radio, juke boxes or other reproduction facilities.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
OCT 5 - 1942

Seeks AFL Affiliation

BOSTON, Oct. 5 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, sole major non-union orchestra in the country, disclosed yesterday it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) concerning union recognition.

The orchestra has been barred in recent years from making radio broadcasts on phonograph records because its players do not belong to the union.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

SEP 17 1942

Sokolsky Tells of Petrillo's Big Ego

SUGGESTS THAT 'King James Caesar' Take Over the Networks, Because He Runs Them Now; Also Federal Commission

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY.

I SEE that that Master of Music, King James Caesar Petrillo, has now forbidden electrical transcriptions. I do not understand why, things being as they are, the NBC and the Columbia networks do not turn their properties over to Petrillo. He runs them now. He says what may and may not be played. I also do not understand why Mr. Fly does not resign from the Federal Communications Commission. Jimmy could run that with his left pinky.

No longer are we to listen to soap opera and the propaganda of the various government bureaus and the rhymes of about something or other hitting the spot. No longer are we to be regaled by phonograph records which the studios play in between times and which are so superior to much that the radio companies dish out. In New York, there is a station called WQXR to which I sometimes listen because so much of it is electrical transcription. I hear that Henry Luce of Time, Life, etc., bought into it and that they are going to make it sound like the March of Time. I prefer Caruso on an electrical transcription.

"NO CAN DO"

So the great James Petrillo says, "no can do. You can't listen to electrical transcriptions. You have to listen to the members of my union or go without." Well, Jimmy, lots of us will go without, even if we have to give up the Philharmonic and listen only to the Boston Symphony. You know, Jimmy, we are learning to do without lots of things—without gasoline, without tires, with less sugar and less meat and without any money after we pay our taxes. So, we'll learn to get along without the radio. And we'll learn to get along without your members.

I received some letters from officials of Petrillo's union saying what a liar I am and what a great guy Jimmy is. So I want to quote to you an editorial from "Musical America," the leading publication of the trade. The editorial is entitled, "Petrillo's Betrayal of Music."

"As schooling goes, Mr. Petrillo represents a kind of ignorance not common among today's men of public affairs. It has been repeatedly stated and never successfully denied, that he got no further than the fourth grade. As a musician, he once played the trumpet and later the drums, but he gave that all up long ago, and there is little or nothing to show that he personally ever thinks of music as an art or as something that is important to others as an art. For him, it is primarily a source of a livelihood for 'My boys'—the union musicians. But, even accepting his concern for unemployed members of his union in the best possible light, it is impossible not to see the fallacy of his notion that if he puts the record broadcasters and the juke boxes out of business he will be creating jobs for unemployed musicians. There simply will be less music for the public.

"The record broadcasters will not employ orchestras, the little taverns will not put musicians to work in place of the juke boxes. Neither can afford any such departure. What will happen is that the union musicians who were paid to make the recordings will no longer get that pay. How serious the extension of this evil will be to the commercial recording companies is another matter that Mr. Petrillo seems to have considered only in the light of a battle between them and his union. The public he does not appear to have considered at all."

NOT ALL HIS FAULT

So there you have what the musicians' trade paper thinks of Caesar. Of course, the fault is not entirely Petrillo's. He has an enlarged ego because the management of the broadcasting companies are cowards, who dare not challenge his authority. As long as they permit him to dominate them, he will do it. You can't blame the poor musicians because if they toot a toot out of turn he will take their cards away and starve them. But you can blame the rich, concert artists who can afford to resign en masse from this disreputable union until it gets another chief who puts music first. Let us put the blame where it belongs in this order:

1. Management of the broadcasting companies;
2. Rich concert musicians;
3. Petrillo—the czar.

REDDING, CALIF.
SEARCHLIGHT

SEP 30 1942

LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR.—Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass.

The Odds Are On Petrillo

P.M. Oct. 6-42

By HENRY SIMON

When the American Federation of Musicians (AFM) ordered an orchestra of adolescents off the air last Summer and followed that edict by refusing its members permission to make records for broadcasting, a tremendous hullabaloo was raised in the papers. A large portion of it, as described in yesterday's PM, was directed against the AFM's president, James C. Petrillo—his career, manners, and arbitrariness.

The impending Senate investigation and Thurman Arnold's court action against the AFM may air more of the charges against Petrillo personally, but the underlying issues should come out more clearly in the court than in the press; and the musicians' side will be heard more fairly.

For the musicians obviously have a good case. Speak to the National Association of Broadcasters, which has set up an office to help the Government fight Petrillo, and you will get gloomy prognostications of the outcome of the legal battle. The NAB has even thought it necessary to send out two large broadsides of unfavorable journalistic reaction and a pamphlet giving all the facts on its side, couched in fine, righteous language.

On their side, the musicians have stated their case only in one paid advertisement and a few early and unfortunate interviews. Since that time Petrillo has stayed fretfully behind closed doors.

The NAB's Story

This is too bad, as the NAB has been very busy gathering and publishing facts and figures to prove that the musicians' claim about the extent of their unemployment (65 per cent) is vastly exaggerated; that the record companies and radio stations are nothing but innocent bystanders; and that, far from being hurt by the juke box and other technological developments, musicians who make records are getting more and more out of the industry.

So far as I know, the NAB's facts and figures are approximately correct. What is seldom mentioned—and never by the NAB—is such facts as these:

1. Only some 2 per cent of the AFM's musicians (which is the same as saying 2 per cent of all but a few of the country's competent instrumentalists) makes records at all.

2. Whatever the exact figure, there is a large amount of unemployment and suffering from lack of jobs among good musicians in the larger cities.

3. From the juke boxes, which represent an expenditure of many millions annually by the U. S. public, individual band leaders like Glenn Miller may build up reputations, but the anonymous musicians in the bands get nothing.

4. Even the 2 per cent of musicians who do make records, well paid as they seem to be, get nothing like a proportionate return on the profits realized from their talents.

What Musicians Don't Get

Figures in support of the last statement are summarized like this in The Orchestra World, a trade paper:

"A band, recording a hit, gets $10 a man ($7.50—H. S.). That record sells for about 21c to the jukebox owner. At least 100,000 copies of a hit record are purchased by the jukebox industry. Each one will get up to 100 plays before being used up. That means $5 a record for an investment of 21c and $500,000—half a million dollars—for the entire jukebox industry. But the musicians don't get more than $10."

Less precise figures—but presumably resulting in a similar ratio—might be worked out for the playing of records on radio stations, some 500 of which cannot or do not afford a single live musician.

In short, what the musicians want and should have is a greater share in the profits and protection made possible by the developments of radio and the juke box. Until they can get it, the AFM has served notice that they won't record at all.

Similarly, in banning amateur orchestras here and there, the union is protecting itself from competition of minors and amateurs just as a carpenter's, newspapermen's, or any other union would.

These are perfectly legal and proper principles for a union to act on, and they probably constitute the main reason that the Government and the NAB feel uncertain about victory in the courts.

Letters To and From the Editor

Musicians and Canned Music

Dear Editor: P.M. Oct 6-42

I certainly hold no brief for Mr. Petrillo who, I agree, has acted often arbitrarily and certainly unwisely in his manner of pursuing ends with which, by and large, I sympathize. But anyone who knows something of what is involved in the mastery of an instrument, or of the conditions under which professional musicians work, must realize that there are two sides to the question, and that, partly because of Mr. Petrillo's personality, combined with frequently wretched tactics on the part of union organizations, only one side has been heard. Misstatements have been circulated, some facts have been distorted, and others ignored.

There are furthermore grounds for believing that the attack on Petrillo is, in the minds of some of its proponents, the spearhead of an eventual all-out offensive against Labor as a whole, in which the Musicians' Union is considered for various reasons as a particularly vulnerable point. As such, it carries potential dangers to democratic society which are incalculable.

The future of our performing musicians is nesessarily a matter of concern to all those who have music itself—as distinct from musicians—at heart. I cannot avoid being concerned over a state of affairs which has come to pervade nearly all of our public musical life, in which profits tend to become the real dictators, at the expense not only of musicians and of music itself, but of the true interests of the public. The prevailing vogue for the exploitation of immature talent—certainly "good business"—only confuses the issue and bemuses the public; and surely it is somewhat highfalutin' of Mr. Thurman Arnold, whom I admire, to regard the issue here as one which involves "freedom of expression."

As far as "canned music" is concerned it is not quite correct to define the musician's relation to it as a mere problem in "technological unemployment." It takes many years of exacting training for a musician to produce a single seventy-five cent record, and the latter is not merely the product, but the reproduction of his work.

ROGER SESSIONS,
Professor of Music,
Princeton University

Princeton, N. J.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
OCT 9 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY JOIN UNION

Negotiates With Petrillo Concerning Recognition —Certain Barriers to be Overcome.

Boston, Oct. 6—The Boston Symphony orchestra, sole major nonunion orchestra in the country, disclosed yesterday that it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), concerning union recognition, but that certain barriers remained to be overcome before an agreement could be reached.

The orchestra made this disclosure—its first public pronouncement on its labor relations—while issuing the first general appeal for funds to sustain it in its 62-year history.

Barred in recent years from making radio broadcasts or phonograph records because its players do not belong to the union, the orchestra said in a printed pronouncement to subscribers that the public was entitled to know of the orchestra management's attitude on the labor issue before it contributed the funds.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 9 - 1942

The Union Issue

In the course of a letter to patrons and friends the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra clarify the position taken by the orchestra in order to set at rest many conflicting rumors about the possible unionization of the orchestra by the American Federation of Musicians. The attitude of the trustees is as follows: "The musical integrity of our institution rests upon the wide discretionary powers we have conferred upon the conductor (Dr. Koussevitzky) in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline. We do not believe our institution can maintain that integrity if our musicians subscribe to the existing by-laws of the federation. If those by-laws were to be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards, our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

According to a report in Boston, it is possible that James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation of Musicians, may consider such changes. But it is clear that the Boston Symphony will insist on artistic domination by its conductor. It is that dominance which explains the admitted excellence of this superb orchestra.

The death last April of Mr. Ernest B. Dane meant the loss to the orchestra of one of the most generous contributors to its Friends of the Orchestra fund. As it is now, the orchestra is about 84 per cent self-supporting. Appeals are made to the Friends of the Orchestra to make up the deficit, which is a small one as symphony organizations go. There are to be two meetings at Symphony hall toward this end, one on Tueseday, Oct. 13, in the afternoon and another on Nov. 10.

Independent

Grace Moore, apparently of a thrifty turn of mind, has decided to manage her own concert appearances hereafter. She has wearied of paying 20 per cent of her earnings to concert managers for promotion of her engagements. So far she is said to have negotiated 24 appearances herself. Thus she says she gets more money for herself and is also able to make better terms with organizations that cannot afford the fees paid by wealthier groups.

The Petrillo Case—III P.M.

If He Wins, Labor May Lose

By Henry Simon Oct. 7, 42

If, as was argued in this column yesterday, Petrillo and the AFM are right in principle and strong in law when they fight for a greater share in the profits and protection that their work should offer them and also for protection against the competition of amateurs and minors, why should their actions cause so hysterical an outcry? Why should anti-labor forces be given the opportunity to make the case a cause celebre which may result in serious anti-labor legislation?

The answer probably lies in the way Petrillo and the AFM have handled their case. Not only has Petrillo shown an almost preposterous disregard for the power of the press and public feeling, but the specific cases they have chosen to fight and the manner of fighting them have laid them open to attack on all sides.

Take first the matter of protection from amateurs and minors. The Interlochen group may have looked like a good opening gun, because the National Music Camp is a private enterprise, campers paying from $275 to $400 for their Summer there. Such a camp, as opposed to a public institution, should not be allowed to compete with professional musicians earning their living.

Unfortunately, it cannot be shown that these boys and girls actually were competing with professionals, as the networks which were to broadcast the concerts easily could have substituted one of their own orchestras of professionals without added cost to themselves.

Furthermore, to open the attack on kids who averaged 15 years was a sure way to alienate public opinion and to elicit a cry of anguish from Sen. Vandenberg, in whose state the camp is located. Finally, for the previous 12 years Petrillo and his predecessor, Weber, had given permission to this group (as they had to many other amateur organizations) to broadcast. Petrillo couldn't have picked a much worse target.

In the matter of getting a larger share of the benefits from technological developments, Petrillo and the AFM acted with greater and more complex unwisdom. They attacked the record companies which, in fact, are on their side.

For what the AFM wants is greater security by means of controlling the performance rights to the recorded works of its members. RCA Victor fought for such control up to the Supreme Court and lost. Both Victor and Columbia continue to print the legend on their records that they are restricted for home use; but it is only a legend. Juke boxes and radio stations may use them without fear from the law, and neither the artists nor the company that made them can object.

So the AFM refuses to let its members play for their friends, the record companies.

What else could they do? one might ask. The answer comes from the files of the AFM. Joe Weber, in his final report as retiring president, advocated legislation that would give control over the public use of recordings analogous to the control authors and publishers have over books.

Just how such control might work for the benefit of musicians in general is too complex a question to enter into here. That it can work successfully, however, is indicated both by the control exercised in England by the Performing Rights Society, and by ASCAP, which takes care of its composers and publishers here.

Petrillo himself has come forward with such a plan, but it looks on the face of it like a bad one: only 15 per cent of the royalties would go to protection of the unemployed, 1 per cent to the performing musicians, 1 per cent to the record companies and 78 per cent for overhead. Not so good.

Legislation is what Weber recommended and what Petrillo has scorned. He thought—and presumably still thinks—that he can get what he wants by "direct" (i.e. high-handed) action.

With the best interests of the musicians at heart, I hope that the AFM loses its case to Thurman Arnold. If it loses, recording can start again—at least until the appeal to the Supreme Court is made—and the scrap may clear the air for an equitable solution of a real problem.

If, however, Petrillo wins, the anti-labor legislators can say,

"See? We can't control this dictator, this czar, under existing legislation. We'd better have some anti-union laws passed."

That would be just too bad.

Petrillo Wins in U. S. Fight to Halt Ban

Oct. 13

Court Rejects Plea for Injunction But Arnold Not to Quit

CHICAGO, Oct. 12 (AP)—The government's petition for an injunction to restrain James C. Petrillo from enforcing an order prohibiting members of his musicians' union from making records for public purposes was dismissed today in Federal Court.

Petrillo served notice quickly that "the ban still stands," but Asst. Atty. Gen. Thurman Arnold told reporters he expected the fight to be carried to the United States Supreme Court, if necessary.

In turning down the government's request, Judge John P. Barnes held the matter essentially was a labor dispute, and expressed the opinion there was a controversy between musicians and the mechanical devices which take the place of musicians.

He cited the Hutcheson case—in which the Supreme Court ruled that the anti-trust law did not apply to labor unions under certain conditions—and said:

"I can't see any way around the Hutcheson case. For that reason the motion to dismiss is granted."

Didn't Hear Defense

The government had contended that the defendants violated the antitrust law by conspiring to monopolize musical entertainment and to kill competition between "canned" music and tunes produced by live musicians.

Petrillo's order, forbidding the 138,000 union members from making recordings and transcriptions for juke boxes and the radio after Aug. 1, evoked critical comment from some Senators and Government officials, music clubs and broadcasters.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
OCT 11 1942

Halt Unionization Of Boston Symphony As Halls Boycotted

NEW YORK, Oct. 10—According to the current edition of Musical Courier magazine, plans for the unionization of the Boston orchestra depend entirely upon James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians. With cancellations of engagements at Rochester, Buffalo, New Haven and other cities, as a result of Petrillo's threat to "boycott" halls in those centers if the nonunion ensemble appears, the orchestra faces the possibility only in its own home at Boston.

Negotiations between Petrillo and representatives of the orchestra, it can now be made known, the Courier writer states, were carried on throughout the summer. At first the objections of some members of the board of directors presented a serious problem. When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and member of the orchestra expressed a willingness to join the AFM, it was believed the way had been cleared.

However, it was pointed out to Petrillo that the wage scale of the orchestra is in some cases above that of the union. With the summer series at the Esplanade and the "pops", it was contended that the members of the orchestra have a longer season than in many other cities.

According to Musical Courier's informant, Petrillo has been asked by both players and board members to show where any advantage can be gained if the orchestra becomes unionized. At present only the matter of the guest soloists and conductors and the tour engagements are his talking points. On the other hand, it is known that many more out of town bids come to the ensemble than it can fulfill and there is some feeling against continuing the tour idea.

Petrillo has asked to approve the "company union" idea for the orchestra but has so far refused.

With a financial drive contemplated this season for the maintenance of the orchestra, it is believed in some quarters that the unionization matter will be settled shortly. Some adherents of the orchestra believe the entire matter should await the settlement of the hearing now being held in Washington on Petrillo's edicts against the making of recordings for broadcasting and the banning of student ensembles from the radio.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

SEP 17 1942

Sokolsky Tells of Petrillo's Big Ego

SUGGESTS THAT 'King James Caesar' Take Over the Networks, Because He Runs Them Now; Also Federal Commission

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY.

I SEE that that Master of Music, King James Caesar Petrillo, has now forbidden electrical transcriptions. I do not understand why, things being as they are, the NBC and the Columbia networks do not turn their properties over to Petrillo. He runs them now. He says what may and may not be played. I also do not understand why Mr. Fly does not resign from the Federal Communications Commission. Jimmy could run that with his left pinky.

No longer are we to listen to soap opera and the propaganda of the various government bureaus and the rhymes of about something or other hitting the spot. No longer are we to be regaled by phonograph records which the studios play in between times and which are so superior to much that the radio companies dish out. In New York, there is a station called WQXR to which I sometimes listen because so much of it is electrical transcription. I hear that Henry Luce of Time, Life, etc., bought into it and that they are going to make it sound like the March of Time. I prefer Caruso on an electrical transcription.

"NO CAN DO"

So the great James Petrillo says, "no can do. You can't listen to electrical transcriptions. You have to listen to the members of my union or go without." Well, Jimmy, lots of us will go without, even if we have to give up the Philharmonic and listen only to the Boston Symphony. You know, Jimmy, we are learning to do without lots of things—without gasoline, without tires, with less sugar and less meat and without any money after we pay our taxes. So, we'll learn to get along without the radio. And we'll learn to get along without your members.

I received some letters from officials of Petrillo's union saying what a liar I am and what a great guy Jimmy is. So I want to quote to you an editorial from "Musical America," the leading publication of the trade. The editorial is entitled, "Petrillo's Betrayal of Music."

"As schooling goes, Mr. Petrillo represents a kind of ignorance not common among today's men of public affairs. It has been repeatedly stated and never successfully denied, that he got no further than the fourth grade. As a musician, he once played the trumpet and later the drums, but he gave that all up long ago, and there is little or nothing to show that he personally ever thinks of music as an art or as something that is important to others as an art. For him, it is primarily a source of a livelihood for 'My boys'—the union musicians. But, even accepting his concern for unemployed members of his union in the best possible light, it is impossible not to see the fallacy of his notion that if he puts the record broadcasters and the juke boxes out of business he will be creating jobs for unemployed musicians. There simply will be less music for the public.

"The record broadcasters will not employ orchestras, the little taverns will not put musicians to work in place of the juke boxes. Neither can afford any such departure. What will happen is that the union musicians who were paid to make the recordings will no longer get that pay. How serious the extension of this evil will be to the commercial recording companies is another matter that Mr. Petrillo seems to have considered only in the light of a battle between them and his union. The public he does not appear to have considered at all."

NOT ALL HIS FAULT

So there you have what the musicians' trade paper thinks of Caesar. Of course, the fault is not entirely Petrillo's. He has an enlarged ego because the management of the broadcasting companies are cowards, who dare not challenge his authority. As long as they permit him to dominate them, he will do it. You can't blame the poor musicians because if they toot a toot out of turn he will take their cards away and starve them. But you can blame the rich, concert artists who can afford to resign en masse from this disreputable union until it gets another chief who puts music first. Let us put the blame where it belongs in this order:

1. Management of the broadcasting companies;
2. Rich concert musicians;
3. Petrillo—the czar.

REDDING, CALIF.
SEARCHLIGHT

SEP 30 1942

LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR—Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass.

The Odds Are On Petrillo

P.M. Oct. 6-42

By HENRY SIMON

When the American Federation of Musicians (AFM) ordered an orchestra of adolescents off the air last Summer and followed that edict by refusing its members permission to make records for broadcasting, a tremendous hullabaloo was raised in the papers. A large portion of it, as described in yesterday's PM, was directed against the AFM's president, James C. Petrillo—his career, manners, and arbitrariness.

The impending Senate investigation and Thurman Arnold's court action against the AFM may air more of the charges against Petrillo personally, but the underlying issues should come out more clearly in the court than in the press; and the musicians' side will be heard more fairly.

For the musicians obviously have a good case. Speak to the National Association of Broadcasters, which has set up an office to help the Government fight Petrillo, and you will get gloomy prognostications of the outcome of the legal battle. The NAB has even thought it necessary to send out two large broadsides of unfavorable journalistic reaction and a pamphlet giving all the facts on its side, couched in fine, righteous language.

On their side, the musicians have stated their case only in one paid advertisement and a few early and unfortunate interviews. Since that time Petrillo has stayed fretfully behind closed doors.

The NAB's Story

This is too bad, as the NAB has been very busy gathering and publishing facts and figures to prove that the musicians' claim about the extent of their unemployment (65 per cent) is vastly exaggerated; that the record companies and radio stations are nothing but innocent bystanders; and that, far from being hurt by the juke box and other technological developments, musicians who make records are getting more and more out of the industry.

So far as I know, the NAB's facts and figures are approximately correct. What is seldom mentioned—and never by the NAB—is such facts as these:

1. Only some 2 per cent of the AFM's musicians (which is the same as saying 2 per cent of all but a few of the country's competent instrumentalists) makes records at all.

2. Whatever the exact figure, there is a large amount of unemployment and suffering from lack of jobs among good musicians in the larger cities.

3. From the juke boxes, which represent an expenditure of many millions annually by the U. S. public, individual band leaders like Glenn Miller may build up reputations, but the anonymous musicians in the bands get nothing.

4. Even the 2 per cent of musicians who do make records, well paid as they seem to be, get nothing like a proportionate return on the profits realized from their talents.

What Musicians Don't Get

Figures in support of the last statement are summarized like this in The Orchestra World, a trade paper:

"A band, recording a hit, gets $10 a man ($7.50—H. S.). That record sells for about 21c to the jukebox owner. At least 100,000 copies of a hit record are purchased by the jukebox industry. Each one will get up to 100 plays before being used up. That means $5 a record for an investment of 21c and $500,000—half a million dollars—for the entire jukebox industry. But the musicians don't get more than $10."

Less precise figures—but presumably resulting in a similar ratio—might be worked out for the playing of records on radio stations, some 500 of which cannot or do not afford a single live musician.

In short, what the musicians want and should have is a greater share in the profits and protection made possible by the developments of radio and the juke box. Until they can get it, the AFM has served notice that they won't record at all.

Similarly, in banning amateur orchestras here and there, the union is protecting itself from competition of minors and amateurs just as a carpenter's, newspapermen's, or any other union would.

These are perfectly legal and proper principles for a union to act on, and they probably constitute the main reason that the Government and the NAB feel uncertain about victory in the courts.

Letters To and From the Editor

Musicians and Canned Music

P.M. Oct 6-42

Dear Editor:

I certainly hold no brief for Mr. Petrillo who, I agree, has acted often arbitrarily and certainly unwisely in his manner of pursuing ends with which, by and large, I sympathize. But anyone who knows something of what is involved in the mastery of an instrument, or of the conditions under which professional musicians work, must realize that there are two sides to the question, and that, partly because of Mr. Petrillo's personality, combined with frequently wretched tactics on the part of union organizations, only one side has been heard. Misstatements have been circulated, some facts have been distorted, and others ignored.

There are furthermore grounds for believing that the attack on Petrillo is, in the minds of some of its proponents, the spearhead of an eventual all-out offensive against Labor as a whole, in which the Musicians' Union is considered for various reasons as a particularly vulnerable point. As such, it carries potential dangers to democratic society which are incalculable.

The future of our performing musicians is nesessarily a matter of concern to all those who have music itself—as distinct from musicians—at heart. I cannot avoid being concerned over a state of affairs which has come to pervade nearly all of our public musical life, in which profits tend to become the real dictators, at the expense not only of musicians and of music itself, but of the true interests of the public. The prevailing vogue for the exploitation of immature talent—certainly "good business"—only confuses the issue and bemuses the public; and surely it is somewhat highfalutin' of Mr. Thurman Arnold, whom I admire, to regard the issue here as one which involves "freedom of expression."

As far as "canned music" is concerned it is not quite correct to define the musician's relation to it as a mere problem in "technological unemployment." It takes many years of exacting training for a musician to produce a single seventy-five cent record, and the latter is not merely the product, but the reproduction of his work.

ROGER SESSIONS,
Professor of Music,
Princeton University

Princeton, N. J.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
OCT 9 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY JOIN UNION

Negotiates With Petrillo Concerning Recognition —Certain Barriers to be Overcome.

Boston, Oct. 6—The Boston Symphony orchestra, sole major non-union orchestra in the country, disclosed yesterday that it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), concerning union recognition, but that certain barriers remained to be overcome before an agreement could be reached.

The orchestra made this disclosure—its first public pronouncement on its labor relations—while issuing the first general appeal for funds to sustain it in its 62-year history.

Barred in recent years from making radio broadcasts or phonograph records because its players do not belong to the union, the orchestra said in a printed pronouncement to subscribers that the public was entitled to know of the orchestra management's attitude on the labor issue before it contributed the funds.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 9 - 1942

The Union Issue

In the course of a letter to patrons and friends the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra clarify the position taken by the orchestra in order to set at rest many conflicting rumors about the possible unionization of the orchestra by the American Federation of Musicians. The attitude of the trustees is as follows: "The musical integrity of our institution rests upon the wide discretionary powers we have conferred upon the conductor (Dr. Koussevitzky) in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline. We do not believe our institution can maintain that integrity if our musicians subscribe to the existing by-laws of the federation. If those by-laws were to be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards, our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

According to a report in Boston, it is possible that James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation of [illegible] may consider such changes. But it is clear that the Boston Symphony will insist on artistic domination by its conductor. It is that dominance which explains the admitted excellence of this superb orchestra.

The death last April of Mr. Ernest B. Dane meant the loss to the orchestra of one of the most generous contributors to its Friends of the Orchestra fund. As it is now, the orchestra is about 84 per cent self-supporting. Appeals are made to the Friends of the Orchestra to make up the deficit, which is a small one as symphony organizations go. There are to be two meetings at Symphony hall toward this end, one on Tuesday, Oct. 13, in the afternoon and another on Nov. 10.

Independent

Grace Moore, apparently of a thrifty turn of mind, has decided to manage her own concert appearances hereafter. She has wearied of paying 20 per cent of her earnings to concert managers for promotion of her engagements. So far she is said to have negotiated 24 appearances herself. Thus she says she gets more money for herself and is also able to make better terms with organizations that cannot afford the fees paid by wealthier groups.

The Petrillo Case—III P.M.

If He Wins, Labor May Lose

By Henry Simon Oct. 7, 42

If, as was argued in this column yesterday, Petrillo and the AFM are right in principle and strong in law when they fight for a greater share in the profits and protection that their work should offer them and also for protection against the competition of amateurs and minors, why should their actions cause so hysterical an outcry? Why should anti-labor forces be given the opportunity to make the case a cause celebre which may result in serious anti-labor legislation?

The answer probably lies in the way Petrillo and the AFM have handled their case. Not only has Petrillo shown an almost preposterous disregard for the power of the press and public feeling, but the specific cases they have chosen to fight and the manner of fighting them have laid them open to attack on all sides.

Take first the matter of protection from amateurs and minors. The Interlochen group may have looked like a good opening gun, because the National Music Camp is a private enterprise, campers paying from $275 to $400 for their Summer there. Such a camp, as opposed to a public institution, should not be allowed to compete with professional musicians earning their living.

Unfortunately, it cannot be shown that these boys and girls actually were competing with professionals, as the networks which were to broadcast the concerts easily could have substituted one of their own orchestras of professionals without added cost to themselves.

Furthermore, to open the attack on kids who averaged 15 years was a sure way to alienate public opinion and to elicit a cry of anguish from Sen. Vandenberg, in whose state the camp is located. Finally, for the previous 12 years Petrillo and his predecessor, Weber, had given permission to this group (as they had to many other amateur organizations) to broadcast. Petrillo couldn't have picked a much worse target.

In the matter of getting a larger share of the benefits from technological developments, Petrillo and the AFM acted with greater and more complex unwisdom. They attacked the record companies which, in fact, are on their side.

For what the AFM wants is greater security by means of controlling the performance rights to the recorded works of its members. RCA Victor fought for such control up to the Supreme Court and lost. Both Victor and Columbia continue to print the legend on their records that they are restricted for home use; but it is only a legend. Juke boxes and radio stations may use them without fear from the law, and neither the artists nor the company that made them can object.

So the AFM refuses to let its members play for their friends, the record companies.

What else could they do? one might ask. The answer comes from the files of the AFM. Joe Weber, in his final report as retiring president, advocated legislation that would give control over the public use of recordings analogous to the control authors and publishers have over books.

Just how such control might work for the benefit of musicians in general is too complex a question to enter into here. That it can work successfully, however, is indicated both by the control exercised in England by the Performing Rights Society, and by ASCAP, which takes care of its composers and publishers here.

Petrillo himself has come forward with such a plan, but it looks on the face of it like a bad one: only 15 per cent of the royalties would go to protection of the unemployed, 1 per cent to the performing musicians, 1 per cent to the record companies and 78 per cent for overhead. Not so good.

Legislation is what Weber recommended and what Petrillo has scorned. He thought—and presumably still thinks—that he can get what he wants by "direct" (i.e. high-handed) action.

With the best interests of the musicians at heart, I hope that the AFM loses its case to Thurman Arnold. If it loses, recording can start again—at least until the appeal to the Supreme Court is made—and the scrap may clear the air for an equitable solution of a real problem.

If, however, Petrillo wins, the anti-labor legislators can say,

"See? We can't control this dictator, this czar, under existing legislation. We'd better have some anti-union laws passed."

That would be just too bad.

Petrillo Wins in U. S. Fight to Halt Ban

Oct. 13

Court Rejects Plea for Injunction But Arnold Not to Quit

CHICAGO, Oct. 12 (AP)—The government's petition for an injunction to restrain James C. Petrillo from enforcing an order prohibiting members of his musicians' union from making records for public purposes was dismissed today in Federal Court.

Petrillo served notice quickly that "the ban still stands," but Asst. Atty. Gen. Thurman Arnold told reporters he expected the fight to be carried to the United States Supreme Court, if necessary.

In turning down the government's request, Judge John P. Barnes held the matter essentially was a labor dispute, and expressed the opinion there was a controversy between musicians and the mechanical devices which take the place of musicians.

He cited the Hutcheson case—in which the Supreme Court ruled that the anti-trust law did not apply to labor unions under certain conditions—and said:

"I can't see any way around the Hutcheson case. For that reason the motion to dismiss is granted."

Didn't Hear Defense

The government had contended that the defendants violated the antitrust law by conspiring to monopolize musical entertainment and to kill competition between "canned" music and tunes produced by live musicians.

Petrillo's order, forbidding the 138,000 union members from making recordings and transcriptions for juke boxes and the radio after Aug. 1, evoked critical comment from some Senators and Government officials, music clubs and broadcasters.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
OCT 11 1942

Halt Unionization Of Boston Symphony As Halls Boycotted

NEW YORK, Oct. 10—According to the current edition of Musical Courier magazine, plans for the unionization of the Boston orchestra depend entirely upon James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians. With cancellations of engagements at Rochester, Buffalo, New Haven and other cities, as a result of Petrillo's threat to "boycott" halls in those centers if the nonunion ensemble appears, the orchestra faces the possibility only in its own home at Boston.

Negotiations between Petrillo and representatives of the orchestra, it can now be made known, the Courier writer states, were carried on throughout the summer. At first the objections of some members of the board of directors presented a serious problem. When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and member of the orchestra expressed a willingness to join the AFM, it was believed the way had been cleared.

However, it was pointed out to Petrillo that the wage scale of the orchestra is in some cases above that of the union. With the summer series at the Esplanade and the "pops", it was contended that the members of the orchestra have a longer season than in many other cities.

According to Musical Courier's informant, Petrillo has been asked by both players and board members to show where any advantage can be gained if the orchestra becomes unionized. At present only the matter of the guest soloists and conductors and the tour engagements are his talking points. On the other hand, it is known that many more out of town bids come to the ensemble than it can fulfill and there is some feeling against continuing the tour idea.

Petrillo has asked to approve the "company union" idea for the orchestra but has so far refused.

With a financial drive contemplated this season for the maintenance of the orchestra, it is believed in some quarters that the unionization matter will be settled shortly. Some adherents of the orchestra believe the entire matter should await the settlement of the hearing now being held in Washington on Petrillo's edicts against the making of recordings for broadcasting and the banning of student ensembles from the radio.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
OCT 9 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY JOIN UNION

Negotiates With Petrillo Concerning Recognition —Certain Barriers to be Overcome.

Boston, Oct. 6—The Boston Symphony orchestra, sole major non-union orchestra in the country, disclosed yesterday that it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), concerning union recognition, but that certain barriers remained to be overcome before an agreement could be reached.

The orchestra made this disclosure—its first public pronouncement on its labor relations—while issuing the first general appeal for funds to sustain it in its 62-year history.

Barred in recent years from making radio broadcasts or phonograph records because its players do not belong to the union, the orchestra said in a printed pronouncement to subscribers that the public was entitled to know of the orchestra management's attitude on the labor issue before it contributed those funds.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 9 - 1942

The Union Issue

In the course of a letter to patrons and friends the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra clarify the position taken by the orchestra in order to set at rest many conflicting rumors about the possible unionization of the orchestra by the American Federation of Musicians. The attitude of the trustees is as follows: "The musical integrity of our institution rests upon the wide discretionary powers we have conferred upon the conductor (Dr. Koussevitzky) in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline. We do not believe our institution can maintain that integrity if our musicians subscribe to the existing by-laws of the federation. If those by-laws were to be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards, our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

According to a report in Boston, it is possible that James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation of Musicians, may consider such changes. But it is clear that the Boston Symphony will insist on artistic domination by its conductor. It is that dominance which explains the admitted excellence of this superb orchestra.

The death last April of Mr. Ernest B. Dane meant the loss to the orchestra of one of the most generous contributors to its Friends of the Orchestra fund. As it is now, the orchestra is about 84 per cent self-supporting. Appeals are made to the Friends of the Orchestra to make up the deficit, which is a small one as symphony organizations go. There are to be two meetings at Symphony hall toward this end, one on Tueseday, Oct. 13, in the afternoon and another on Nov. 10.

Independent

Grace Moore, apparently of a thrifty turn of mind, has decided to manage her own concert appearances hereafter. She has wearied of paying 20 per cent of her earnings to concert managers for promotion of her engagements. So far she is said to have negotiated 24 appearances herself. Thus she says she gets more money for herself and is also able to make better terms with organizations that cannot afford the fees paid by wealthier groups.

The Petrillo Case—III P.M.

If He Wins, Labor May Lose

By Henry Simon Oct. 7, 42

If, as was argued in this column yesterday, Petrillo and the AFM are right in principle and strong in law when they fight for a greater share in the profits and protection that their work should offer them and also for protection against the competition of amateurs and minors, why should their actions cause so hysterical an outcry? Why should anti-labor forces be given the opportunity to make the case a cause celebre which may result in serious anti-labor legislation?

The answer probably lies in the way Petrillo and the AFM have handled their case. Not only has Petrillo shown an almost preposterous disregard for the power of the press and public feeling, but the specific cases they have chosen to fight and the manner of fighting them have laid them open to attack on all sides.

Take first the matter of protection from amateurs and minors. The Interlochen group may have looked like a good opening gun, because the National Music Camp is a private enterprise, campers paying from $275 to $400 for their Summer there. Such a camp, as opposed to a public institution, should not be allowed to compete with professional musicians earning their living.

Unfortunately, it cannot be shown that these boys and girls actually were competing with professionals, as the networks which were to broadcast the concerts easily could have substituted one of their own orchestras of professionals without added cost to themselves.

Furthermore, to open the attack on kids who averaged 15 years was a sure way to alienate public opinion and to elicit a cry of anguish from Sen. Vandenberg, in whose state the camp is located. Finally, for the previous 12 years Petrillo and his predecessor, Weber, had given permission to this group (as they had to many other amateur organizations) to broadcast. Petrillo couldn't have picked a much worse target.

In the matter of getting a larger share of the benefits from technological developments, Petrillo and the AFM acted with greater and more complex unwisdom. They attacked the record companies which, in fact, are on their side.

For what the AFM wants is greater security by means of controlling the performance rights to the recorded works of its members. RCA Victor fought for such control up to the Supreme Court and lost. Both Victor and Columbia continue to print the legend on their records that they are restricted for home use; but it is only a legend. Juke boxes and radio stations may use them without fear from the law, and neither the artists nor the company that made them can object.

So the AFM refuses to let its members play for their friends, the record companies.

What else could they do? one might ask. The answer comes from the files of the AFM. Joe Weber, in his final report as retiring president, advocated legislation that would give control over the public use of recordings analogous to the control authors and publishers have over books.

Just how such control might work for the benefit of musicians in general is too complex a question to enter into here. That it can work successfully, however, is indicated both by the control exercised in England by the Performing Rights Society, and by ASCAP, which takes care of its composers and publishers here.

Petrillo himself has come forward with such a plan, but it looks on the face of it like a bad one: only 15 per cent of the royalties would go to protection of the unemployed, 1 per cent to the performing musicians, 1 per cent to the record companies and 78 per cent for overhead. Not so good.

Legislation is what Weber recommended and what Petrillo has scorned. He thought—and presumably still thinks—that he can get what he wants by "direct" (i.e. high-handed) action.

With the best interests of the musicians at heart, I hope that the AFM loses its case to Thurman Arnold. If it loses, recording can start again—at least until the appeal to the Supreme Court is made—and the scrap may clear the air for an equitable solution of a real problem.

If, however, Petrillo wins, the anti-labor legislators can say,

"See? We can't control this dictator, this czar, under existing legislation. We'd better have some anti-union laws passed."

That would be just too bad.

Petrillo Wins in U. S. Fight to Halt Ban

Oct. 13

Court Rejects Plea for Injunction But Arnold Not to Quit

CHICAGO, Oct. 12 (AP)—The government's petition for an injunction to restrain James C. Petrillo from enforcing an order prohibiting members of his musicians' union from making records for public purposes was dismissed today in Federal Court.

Petrillo served notice quickly that "the ban still stands," but Asst. Atty. Gen. Thurman Arnold told reporters he expected the fight to be carried to the United States Supreme Court, if necessary.

In turning down the government's request, Judge John P. Barnes held the matter essentially was a labor dispute, and expressed the opinion there was a controversy between musicians and the mechanical devices which take the place of musicians.

He cited the Hutcheson case—in which the Supreme Court ruled that the anti-trust law did not apply to labor unions under certain conditions—and said:

"I can't see any way around the Hutcheson case. For that reason the motion to dismiss is granted."

Didn't Hear Defense

The government had contended that the defendants violated the antitrust law by conspiring to monopolize musical entertainment and to kill competition between "canned" music and tunes produced by live musicians.

Petrillo's order, forbidding the 138,000 union members from making recordings and transcriptions for juke boxes and the radio after Aug. 1, evoked critical comment from some Senators and Government officials, music clubs and broadcasters.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
OCT 11 1942

Halt Unionization Of Boston Symphony As Halls Boycotted

NEW YORK, Oct. 10—According to the current edition of Musical Courier magazine, plans for the unionization of the Boston orchestra depend entirely upon James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians. With cancellations of engagements at Rochester, Buffalo, New Haven and other cities, as a result of Petrillo's threat to "boycott" halls in those centers if the nonunion ensemble appears, the orchestra faces the possibility only in its own home at Boston.

Negotiations between Petrillo and representatives of the orchestra, it can now be made known, the Courier writer states, were carried on throughout the summer. At first the objections of some members of the board of directors presented a serious problem. When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and member of the orchestra expressed a willingness to join the AFM, it was believed the way had been cleared.

However, it was pointed out to Petrillo that the wage scale of the orchestra is in some cases above that of the union. With the summer series at the Esplanade and the "pops", it was contended that the members of the orchestra have a longer season than in many other cities.

According to Musical Courier's informant, Petrillo has been asked by both players and board members to show where any advantage can be gained if the orchestra becomes unionized. At present only the matter of the guest soloists and conductors and the tour engagements are his talking points. On the other hand, it is known that many more out of town bids come to the ensemble than it can fulfill and there is some feeling against continuing the tour idea.

Petrillo has asked to approve the "company union" idea for the orchestra but has so far refused.

With a financial drive contemplated this season for the maintenance of the orchestra, it is believed in some quarters that the unionization matter will be settled shortly. Some adherents of the orchestra believe the entire matter should await the settlement of the hearing now being held in Washington on Petrillo's edicts against the making of recordings for broadcasting and the banning of student ensembles from the radio.

The Petrillo Case — 1

P.M. Oct 5 '42

The Press Hides the Issues Behind the Big, Bad Wolf

By Henry Simon

Shortly (date still unspecified) Sen. D. Worth Clark of Idaho and a suitably chosen subcommittee begin a full dress investigation of the American Federation of Musicians (AFM), James Cesar Petrillo, president. The Senate has voted $5000, and Clark plans to call many prominent composers, performers, and union officials to testify. It should be a good show and worth a lot of publicity.

Then, on Oct. 12, Thurman Arnold is scheduled to have his hearing in court for an injunction to cause the AFM to desist from eight "acts and things." Most of these "acts and things" are activities of the AFM's president.

It looks as though the Government really were going after that man Petrillo. It looks—superficially, at least—as though the good Senator and the good Assistant Attorney General may skin alive the nasty fellow who speaks such vile English.

That, at least, is the comparatively inocuous way in which the vast majority of the press has handled the situation. The staff engaged by the National Association of Broadcasters to fight Petrillo has collected a batch of no fewer than 25,000 newspaper clippings on the subject and only six of the lot (including, strangely enough, one by Westbrook Pegler) can be remotely said to favor Petrillo's side. The picture that comes out is this:

A vigorous, gruff, unpolished labor leader, whose middle name fortunately happens to be Caesar, gets just too much power. He threatens the morale of the nation by upsetting the recording business, and he takes innocent children too young to join his big, bad union off the air. Why, there's no telling what he'll do next. One presumably responsible official of Oberlin College has written in alarm to PM to suggest that there is nothing "to prevent him (Petrillo) from banning church music from the air because the congregation isn't unionized."

Congregations Are Safe

For the comfort of Oberlin's officialdom, it might be pointed out that Petrillo's union takes in only instrumentalists, and congregations are in no danger from him. However, such exaggerated and uninformed hysteria gives a wonderful opportunity to forces which may have much bigger game in mind than the protection of amateurs with microphone itch.

If you can get a fine, fantastic villain to bop on the head, you may be able to ¶ Weaken the demands of musicians for a more sizable share in the profits of their work.

¶ Get through, on a popular wave of enthusiasm, legislation aimed apparently at one union, but naturally covering every other union as well. The two senators who have expressed themselves most vigorously in l'affaire Petrillo, Clark and Vandenberg, have obscure reputations as champions of labor; and while Clark has said in private conversation that anti-labor legislation is not his object, the opportunity is too juicy for us to hope that some Byrd or other won't jump in.

PM holds no brief for Petrillo personally. Most of the anti-AFM publicity in the press, however, has concentrated on the unsavory aspects of Petrillo's personality and career, and made it appear that they are good reasons for deciding far other issues against the Federation.

Typical of these attacks was a prominent piece in Life magazine by James Coughlan. Highlights of this piece are that Petrillo suggests to Coughlan "an elderly frog that has just eaten a big and somewhat bitter dragonfly;" that he gets a larger salary than the heads of AFL and CIO; that he used to ride around in an armored car; that he employs a bodyguard; that he may have faked his own kidnaping; and that he once ordered his men through a picket line. The picture stinks; but still it stinks largely of red herring.

Fundamental Issues

Such details are as irrelevant as they are inflammatory, for they disregard the fundamental issues in this particular scrap, which are:

¶ Should unions be allowed to protect their members from the ravages implicit in technological developments—as the AFM claims to do by refusing to allow its members to make recordings for broadcast?

¶ Should unions be allowed to protect their members from the competition of minors and amateurs—as the AFM claimed to be doing when it refused the major networks permission to broadcast the concerts of the musical camp at Interlochen, the orchestra of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and others?

When it comes to dealing with these questions—which have occasioned the press attacks on Petrillo—thinking is usually as fuzzy as it is inaccurate. Instead of dealing with the issue in its broad implications, Life attributes the Interlochen decision to the phenomenon that "gifted children give him (Petrillo) the horrors." It professes to "find it hard to see the difference between this and the regulation 'shake-down' as employed in the ordinary racket" when the AFM suggests the use of stand-bys. Stand-bys may be a debatable institution, but scarcely one to be quickly dismissed with name-calling.

James C. Petrillo Photo by Morris Gordon, PM

On the recording ban, Coughlan is equally superficial and less accurate. He attributes the ruling to many years of brooding by Petrillo on canned music and his ultimate decision to do something about it. As a matter of fact, the decision was arrived at unanimously by the 518 delegates at the 46th national convention of the AFM. The ruling was an order to Petrillo given by the union's International Executive Board, not the personal peeve of an "elderly frog."

As for the broader question of how to deal with the problems inherent in technological developments, the press has little or nothing to contribute. It makes better reading (and better labor-baiting) to lay it all to that mean Petrillo.

Fuzzy Thinking

Finally, when dealing with the case of the Service Men's Center in Times Square, for the opening of which the soldiers' band from This Is the Army was refused permission to play, the press usually omitted the two most significant facts in the story:

¶ The Service Men's Center is the brain-child of the advertising department of the Pepsi-Cola Co., which foots the bills, sells the boys refreshments, and advertises its product at the Center with enormous signs. It is strictly a private affair and a good commercial stunt.

¶ If the band had played at the opening, it would have violated not so much a whim of Petrillo and the AFM as a very explicit ordinance of the U. S. Army.

It is this sort of thinking that has created most of the anti-Petrillo, anti-AFM hysteria. It has given anti-labor forces the opportunity to foster anti-labor legislation seldom equaled since the days of the sit-down strikes. Petrillo is quickly being built up into the ogre John L. Lewis once was; and the New York Times already has sounded the call to arms in a series of editorials demanding that labor laws be "radically revised."

On the fundamental issues, PM believes Petrillo and the AFM are in the right, but they have laid themselves open to legitimate criticism as well as the sort they have received. In tomorrow's piece I should like to examine the issues fumigated of the red-herring stink that has hung around them in recent discussions, and on Wednesday see what errors appear to have been made in arriving at some just solution of the problems.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

OCT 15 1942

Boston Players Willing to Join A. F. M. if Ideals Are Protected

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now the only non-union major orchestra in this country, are willing to consider affiliation of the orchestra with the American Federation of Musicians if the A. F. of L.'s affiliate's rules and practices should become such as to offer the orchestra the essential protection of its ideals.

Jerome D. Greene, president of the orchestra's trustees, who made this statement in a speech received here yesterday, also pointed out that under the Wagner act the question of joining the union lies exclusively with the musicians of the orchestra. On this subject there is no issue between the musicians and the trustees. "Both are facing the problem with minds open to any proposal consistent with the integrity of the orchestra's ideals and with due regard to the material as well as the artistic welfare of the organization," Mr. Greene said.

Mr Greene made his speech Tuesday night at a public meeting at Symphony Hall, Boston, under the auspices of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The trustees, in a statement ten days ago, said that the musical integrity of the institution rested on the wide discretionary power conferred upon the conductor in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline and they did not believe that this integrity could be maintained under the federation's present by-laws. "If these should be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards our chief cause for anxiety would be removed," the trustees said.

Since the announcement, in that statement, that the Boston Symphony needed $188,000 to balance its 1942-'43 budget $22,229.10 has been contributed by 670 donors, Mr. Greene said.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

OCT 11 1942

Statement in Good Taste

In brief mention of The American Federation of Musicians, to which the Boston Symphony Orchestra does NOT belong, the trustees of the orchestra say: "The musical integrity of our institution rests upon the wide discretionary powers we have conferred on the conductor in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline. We do not believe our institution can maintain that integrity if our musicians subscribe to the existing by-laws of the Federation. If those by-laws were to be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards, our chief cause for anxiety would be removed." Never have so few words said so much!

There was a broadcast last Sunday by the C. B. S. orchestra of Randall Thompson's opera in one act — commissioned last March and presented first on the air at that time. Don't expect its name, for until it may be seen in print, its phonetics have puzzled. It concerns Solomon, whose 900 wives were troublesome; his one favorite wife, a powerful butterfly and the wife of the butterfly.

An ironic comedy, the music is charming in its airy lift. Singers from the Metropolitan and Philadelphia operas, with a chorus, presented the whimsical story in clearly understood English. The dialogue was far in advance of that in other recalled operas by American composers in that it was measurably free from strained musical utterance. We suspect that someone will collaborate with Mr. Thompson for associated ballet. The plot cries out for it.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD ADVERTISER

OCT 11 1942

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra is about to sign up with the musicians union, it would appear from announcement by trustees of the Friends of the Orchestra in Boston, who indicate that the union may so revise its by-laws "so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards." The musical integrity of the orchestra, the statement sets out, "rests upon the wide discretionary powers we have conferred upon the conductor in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline." This matter is significant in that the proposal for amendment of the union by-laws so as to enable the orchestra to maintain its musical integrity has come from the union itself, and there is no disposition on the part of the trustees to oppose unionization farther than that point.

If the by-laws are amended, if the amendment is satisfactory to the trustees, if the players sign up, then the only non-union large none-union symphony orchestra in the United States will have joined union ranks.

[120]

"The Nation" Oct. 3 '42

Mr. Petrillo's Hopeless War

BY CHARLES WILLIAMS

PETRILLO Obstructs War Effort," "Petrillo Perils Free Business," "Petrillo Hits at Heart of Radio" —these and other similar headlines, heavily laden with menace but also having an unwitting note of burlesque, have been appearing regularly on newspaper front pages. They reveal that James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, has succeeded John L. Lewis, at least temporarily, as labor's chief inciter of editorial frenzy.

Petrillo, a cocky Chicago labor politician with a great disdain for public opinion, provoked these outbursts, and also a Congressional investigation, by forbidding his musicians to make recordings for radio stations and juke boxes. He forbade them on the ground that his "boys," the 138,000 members of the musicians' union, were suffering seriously from unemployment. By making recordings, he said, musicians simply were pushing themselves out of jobs. When Elmer Davis, as director of the Office of War Information, protested that lack of recorded music would cripple many small radio stations essential to our national communications system, Petrillo told him that he was "absolutely misinformed" and refused to rescind the ban. Aside from the results already mentioned, his recalcitrance has brought forth a Department of Justice charge of "wrongful and unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in phonograph records, electrical transcriptions, and radio broadcasting."

Actually the ban on recordings, which has been in effect since August 1, was not altogether the act of a "dictator." It was sanctioned by the union's executive board and represents a desperate but probably futile effort to stave off the effects of technological advance. The country's 500,000 juke boxes and the use of "canned" music by hundreds of radio stations have destroyed employment opportunities for thousands of musicians. Many taverns and hotels which formerly employed small bands now use the juke box; it costs less and provides music by Benny Goodman instead of Joe Doakes. Of some 800 radio stations in the United States, fewer than 300 employ musicians; the rest use recordings only. "A good recording," Petrillo has estimated, "costs musicians about a million dollars in wages before it runs its course." Putting aside for the moment the question of whether a good recording is preferable on aesthetic grounds to the nondescript playing of "live" musicians, it is obvious that the A. F. of M. has a case. It becomes even more obvious when one learns that as a rule between 50 and 60 per cent of the A. F. of M.'s members are unemployed. "Justice demands," observed an advertisement inserted by the union in New York City newspapers last month, "that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned' music for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

Unfortunately for the musicians, the reputation of their president is such that it precludes the possibility of any sympathetic public hearing. Petrillo is a perfect justification of Pegler's conception of a labor boss. He receives $46,000 a year in addition to a generous expense account, maintains a suite at the Waldorf, rides around in a huge bullet-proof car, employs six or seven bodyguards, four of whom are relatives, and talks as if he were following a Pegler script. He is high up in the Ed Kelly machine, and fits nicely into the Chicago scene. There is a persistent rumor that he wants to be the city's next mayor. In the American Federation of Musicians his rule is thoroughly despotic. The constitution empowers him to call strikes, levy fines of as much as $5,000 on individual members, and "annul and set aside" the constitution, by-laws, and resolutions and substitute provisions of his own making. The Department of Justice once characterized his powers as "absolute and subject to no control." He uses them bluntly, though occasionally he attempts to dis-already has indicated that he would lift the recording prohibition if some system of royalties could be worked out for the musicians who did the recording. This, unfortunately, requires some friendly federal legislation, which at the moment seems improbable, and it would not materially change the average musician's status. It would mean a larger income for the name bands and possibly a larger union relief check for the unemployed, but it would not restore the musician to his pre-juke box position. Small-time musicians have become as obsolete as the Indian. James Caesar Petrillo, for all his confident toughness, will not be able to erase that fact.

semble, as when he wrote to Elmer Davis this summer that he was merely a "messenger for 138,000 musicians."

The dictatorial strain in its tough Chicago form is unmistakable in Petrillo. He attracted national attention first in December, 1939, when as head of the Chicago Federation of Musicians he unreasonably ordered "The Man Who Came to Dinner" and George White's "Scandals" to delete all reference to John L. Lewis. The National Council on Freedom from Censorship, seeing in this move an ominous new threat to our liberties, immediately wired, "Your action creates a precedent by which control of an entire production may be vested in a labor union, reflecting its self-interests and preiudices."

As national president of the A. F. of M., a position he inherited in 1940 from Joe Weber, who had held it since 1900, Petrillo has won a dozen major battles for professional musicians. Caring little or nothing for public opinion, partly because his Chicago training induced the belief that "suckers" don't count, he threatened a strike against a national radio network to force a station in Louisville to employ six musicians, and he called one to get a slightly better contract for eleven musicians in Pittsburgh. Although newspapers throughout the country raged, he refused to permit radio broadcasts by army bands until the studios had agreed to give "stand-by"

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

NOV 20 1942

Union Battle Dodged By Boston Symphony

New York, Nov. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra returned last night to begin its 57th season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the sixty-two year old orchestra and the musicians' union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter.

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 27 1942

Boston Symphony Comes to Terms With Federation

New York, Nov. 27—After obtaining the right to hire musicians anywhere in the country, the Boston Symphony orchestra has come to terms with the American Federation of Musicians, it was learned Wednesday night. The orchestra, for years the only non-union group among the major musical ensembles, it expected to return to the air after a two-year ban and was said to be negotiating a $75,000 contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System.

During the discussion with the union, Serge Koussevitsky, famed director of the Boston Symphony, insisted on the right to hire players wherever he wanted, although the union by-laws confined him to the local jurisdiction.

James C. Petrillo, president of the union, declared the by-laws could be amended only at the annual convention, but finally obtained approval of the change by polling locals by telegraph.

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NOV 27 1942

Boston Orchestra Won't Deny It's Unionized

BOSTON, Nov. 26 (UP).—Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today refused to confirm or deny a published report that they have come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo.

The report said the orchestra accepted terms of the negotiations which call for numerous concessions on its part.

The Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the United States that has been non-union in recent years. Current negotiations have been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

NOV 26 1942

Big Orchestra Is Going Union

From The Journal's N. Y. Bureau

New York, N. Y.—The Boston symphony orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known Wednesday night.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its bylaws so that objections raised by the Boston symphony trustees could be overcome.

Right to Hire, Issue

The Boston symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The bylaws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these bylaws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the bylaws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston symphony.

Clears Up Difficulties

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world famous pianists, violinists, cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear.

The agreement with the union also clears up the orchestra's difficulties with concert halls. Auditoriums in New York, Springfield, Mass., and other cities where the Boston symphony has been scheduled to play on tour have been threatened with being put on the union's "unfair list" if they rented their facilities to a nonunion orchestra. This would have meant the withdrawal of union orchestras from such halls.

The Boston symphony orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record making imposed by Petrillo and the union is lifted. It is believed that conversations between the union and broadcasters and record makers toward composing this dispute are proceeding, though there is no immediate likelihood of a settlement.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Pact With Union Reported

BOSTON, Nov. 26.—(U. P.)—Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today refused to confirm or deny a published report that they have come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo. The Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the United States that has been non-union in recent years.

"The Nation" Oct. 3 '42

Mr. Petrillo's Hopeless War

BY CHARLES WILLIAMS

PETRILLO Obstructs War Effort," "Petrillo Perils Free Business," "Petrillo Hits at Heart of Radio" —these and other similar headlines, heavily laden with menace but also having an unwitting note of burlesque, have been appearing regularly on newspaper front pages. They reveal that James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, has succeeded John L. Lewis, at least temporarily, as labor's chief inciter of editorial frenzy.

Petrillo, a cocky Chicago labor politician with a great disdain for public opinion, provoked these outbursts, and also a Congressional investigation, by forbidding his musicians to make recordings for radio stations and juke boxes. He forbade them on the ground that his "boys," the 138,000 members of the musicians' union, were suffering seriously from unemployment. By making recordings, he said, musicians simply were pushing themselves out of jobs. When Elmer Davis, as director of the Office of War Information, protested that lack of recorded music would cripple many small radio stations essential to our national communications system, Petrillo told him that he was "absolutely misinformed" and refused to rescind the ban. Aside from the results already mentioned, his recalcitrance has brought forth a Department of Justice charge of "wrongful and unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in phonograph records, electrical transcriptions, and radio broadcasting."

Actually the ban on recordings, which has been in effect since August 1, was not altogether the act of a "dictator." It was sanctioned by the union's executive board and represents a desperate but probably futile effort to stave off the effects of technological advance. The country's 500,000 juke boxes and the use of "canned" music by hundreds of radio stations have destroyed employment opportunities for thousands of musicians. Many taverns and hotels which formerly employed small bands now use the juke box; it costs less and provides music by Benny Goodman instead of Joe Doakes. Of some 800 radio stations in the United States, fewer than 300 employ musicians; the rest use recordings only. "A good recording," Petrillo has estimated, "costs musicians about a million dollars in wages before it runs its course." Putting aside for the moment the question of whether a good recording is preferable on aesthetic grounds to the nondescript playing of "live" musicians, it is obvious that the A. F. of M. has a case. It becomes even more obvious when one learns that as a rule between 50 and 60 per cent of the A. F. of M.'s members are unemployed. "Justice demands," observed an advertisement inserted by the union in New York City newspapers last month, "that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned' music for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

Unfortunately for the musicians, the reputation of their president is such that it precludes the possibility of any sympathetic public hearing. Petrillo is a perfect justification of Pegler's conception of a labor boss. He receives $46,000 a year in addition to a generous expense account, maintains a suite at the Waldorf, rides around in a huge bullet-proof car, employs six or seven bodyguards, four of whom are relatives, and talks as if he were following a Pegler script. He is high up in the Ed Kelly machine, and fits nicely into the Chicago scene. There is a persistent rumor that he wants to be the city's next mayor. In the American Federation of Musicians his rule is thoroughly despotic. The constitution empowers him to call strikes, levy fines of as much as $5,000 on individual members, and "annul and set aside" the constitution, by-laws, and resolutions and substitute provisions of his own making. The Department of Justice once characterized his powers as "absolute and subject to no control." He uses them bluntly, though occasionally he attempts to dissemble, as when he wrote to Elmer Davis this summer that he was merely a "messenger for 138,000 musicians."

The dictatorial strain in its tough Chicago form is unmistakable in Petrillo. He attracted national attention first in December, 1939, when as head of the Chicago Federation of Musicians he unreasonably ordered "The Man Who Came to Dinner" and George White's "Scandals" to delete all reference to John L. Lewis. The National Council on Freedom from Censorship, seeing in this move an ominous new threat to our liberties, immediately wired, "Your action creates a precedent by which control of an entire production may be vested in a labor union, reflecting its self-interests and prejudices."

already has indicated that he would lift the recording prohibition if some system of royalties could be worked out for the musicians who did the recording. This, unfortunately, requires some friendly federal legislation, which at the moment seems improbable, and it would not materially change the average musician's status. It would mean a larger income for the name bands and possibly a larger union relief check for the unemployed, but it would not restore the musician to his pre-juke box position. Small-time musicians have become as obsolete as the Indian. James Caesar Petrillo, for all his confident toughness, will not be able to erase that fact.

As national president of the A. F. of M., a position he inherited in 1940 from Joe Weber, who had held it since 1900, Petrillo has won a dozen major battles for professional musicians. Caring little or nothing for public opinion, partly because his Chicago training induced the belief that "suckers" don't count, he threatened a strike against a national radio network to force a station in Louisville to employ six musicians, and he called one to get a slightly better contract for eleven musicians in Pittsburgh. Although newspapers throughout the country raged, he refused to permit radio broadcasts by army bands until the studios had agreed to give "stand-by"

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

NOV 20 1942

Union Battle Dodged By Boston Symphony

New York, Nov. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra returned last night to begin its 57th season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the sixty-two year old orchestra and the musicians' union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter.

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 27 1942

Boston Symphony Comes to Terms With Federation

New York, Nov. 27—After obtaining the right to hire musicians anywhere in the country, the Boston Symphony orchestra has come to terms with the American Federation of Musicians, it was learned Wednesday night. The orchestra, for years the only non-union group among the major musical ensembles, it expected to return to the air after a two-year ban and was said to be negotiating a $75,000 contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System.

During the discussion with the union, Serge Koussevitsky, famed director of the Boston Symphony, insisted on the right to hire players wherever he wanted, although the union by-laws confined him to the local jurisdiction.

James C. Petrillo, president of the union, declared the by-laws could be amended only at the annual convention, but finally obtained approval of the change by polling locals by telegraph.

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NOV 27 1942

Boston Orchestra Won't Deny It's Unionized

BOSTON, Nov. 26 (UP).—Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today refused to confirm or deny a published report that they have come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo.

The report said the orchestra accepted terms of the negotiations which call for numerous concessions on its part.

The Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the United States that has been non-union in recent years. Current negotiations have been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

[121]

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

NOV 26 1942

Big Orchestra Is Going Union

From The Journal's N. Y. Bureau

New York, N. Y.—The Boston symphony orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known Wednesday night.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its bylaws so that objections raised by the Boston symphony trustees could be overcome.

Right to Hire, Issue

The Boston symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The bylaws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these bylaws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the bylaws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston symphony.

Clears Up Difficulties

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world famous pianists, violinists, cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear.

The agreement with the union also clears up the orchestra's difficulties with concert halls. Auditoriums in New York, Springfield, Mass., and other cities where the Boston symphony has been scheduled to play on tour have been threatened with being put on the union's "unfair list" if they rented their facilities to a nonunion orchestra. This would have meant the withdrawal of union orchestras from such halls.

The Boston symphony orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record making imposed by Petrillo and the union is lifted. It is believed that conversations between the union and broadcasters and record makers toward composing this dispute are proceeding, though there is no immediate likelihood of a settlement.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Pact With Union Reported

BOSTON, Nov. 26.—(U. P.)—Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today refused to confirm or deny a published report that they have come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo. The Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the United States that has been non-union in recent years.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

already has indicated that he would lift the recording prohibition if some system of royalties could be worked out for the musicians who did the recording. This, unfortunately, requires some friendly federal legislation, which at the moment seems improbable, and it would not materially change the average musician's status. It would mean a larger income for the name bands and possibly a larger union relief check for the unemployed, but it would not restore the musician to his pre-juke box position. Small-time musicians have become as obsolete as the Indian. James Caesar Petrillo, for all his confident toughness, will not be able to erase that fact.

semble, as when he wrote to Elmer Davis this summer that he was merely a "messenger for 138,000 musicians."

The dictatorial strain in its tough Chicago form is unmistakable in Petrillo. He attracted national attention first in December, 1939, when as head of the Chicago Federation of Musicians he unreasonably ordered "The Man Who Came to Dinner" and George White's "Scandals" to delete all reference to John L. Lewis. The National Council on Freedom from Censorship, seeing in this move an ominous new threat to our liberties, immediately wired, "Your action creates a precedent by which control of an entire production may be vested in a labor union, reflecting its self-interests and prejudices."

As national president of the A. F. of M., a position he inherited in 1940 from Joe Weber, who had held it since 1900, Petrillo has won a dozen major battles for professional musicians. Caring little or nothing for public opinion, partly because his Chicago training induced the belief that "suckers" don't count, he threatened a strike against a national radio network to force a station in Louisville to employ six musicians, and he called one to get a slightly better contract for eleven musicians in Pittsburgh. Although newspapers throughout the country raged, he refused to permit radio broadcasts by army bands until the studios had agreed to give "stand-by"

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

NOV 20 1942

GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE

PITTSBURGH, PA.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

NOV 26 1942

Big Orchestra Is Going Union

From The Journal's N. Y. Bureau

New York, N. Y.—The Boston symphony orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known Wednesday night.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its bylaws so that objections raised by the Boston symphony trustees could be overcome.

Right to Hire, Issue

The Boston symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The bylaws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these bylaws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the bylaws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston symphony.

Clears Up Difficulties

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world famous pianists, violinists, cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear.

The agreement with the union also clears up the orchestra's difficulties with concert halls. Auditoriums in New York, Springfield, Mass., and other cities where the Boston symphony has been scheduled to play on tour have been threatened with being put on the union's "unfair list" if they rented their facilities to a nonunion orchestra. This would have meant the

"The Nation" Oct. 3 '42

Mr. Petrillo's Hopeless War

BY CHARLES WILLIAMS

PETRILLO Obstructs War Effort," "Petrillo Perils Free Business," "Petrillo Hits at Heart of Radio" —these and other similar headlines, heavily laden with menace but also having an unwitting note of burlesque, have been appearing regularly on newspaper front pages. They reveal that James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, has succeeded John L. Lewis, at least temporarily, as labor's chief inciter of editorial frenzy.

Petrillo, a cocky Chicago labor politician with a great disdain for public opinion, provoked these outbursts, and also a Congressional investigation, by forbidding his musicians to make recordings for radio stations and juke boxes. He forbade them on the ground that his "boys," the 138,000 members of the musicians' union, were suffering seriously from unemployment. By making recordings, he said, musicians simply were pushing themselves out of jobs. When Elmer Davis, as director of the Office of War Information, protested that lack of recorded music would cripple many small radio stations essential to our national communications system, Petrillo told him that he was "absolutely misinformed" and refused to rescind the ban. Aside from the results already mentioned, his recalcitrance has brought forth a Department of Justice charge of "wrongful and unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in phonograph records, electrical transcriptions, and radio broadcasting."

Actually the ban on recordings, which has been in effect since August 1, was not altogether the act of a "dictator." It was sanctioned by the union's executive board and represents a desperate but probably futile effort to stave off the effects of technological advance. The country's 500,000 juke boxes and the use of "canned" music by hundreds of radio stations have destroyed employment opportunities for thousands of musicians. Many taverns and hotels which formerly employed small bands now use the juke box; it costs less and provides music by Benny Goodman instead of Joe Doakes. Of some 800 radio stations in the United States, fewer than 300 employ musicians; the rest use recordings only. "A good recording," Petrillo has estimated, "costs musicians about a million dollars in wages before it runs its course." Putting aside for the moment the question of whether a good recording is preferable on aesthetic grounds to the nondescript playing of "live" musicians, it is obvious that the A. F. of M. has a case. It becomes even more obvious when one learns that as a rule between 50 and 60 per cent of the A. F. of M.'s members are unemployed. "Justice demands," observed an advertisement inserted by the union in New York City newspapers last month, "that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned' music for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

Unfortunately for the musicians, the reputation of their president is such that it precludes the possibility of any sympathetic public hearing. Petrillo is a perfect justification of Pegler's conception of a labor boss. He receives $46,000 a year in addition to a generous expense account, maintains a suite at the Waldorf, rides around in a huge bullet-proof car, employs six or seven bodyguards, four of whom are relatives, and talks as if he were following a Pegler script. He is high up in the Ed Kelly machine, and fits nicely into the Chicago scene. There is a persistent rumor that he wants to be the city's next mayor. In the American Federation of Musicians his rule is thoroughly despotic. The constitution empowers him to call strikes, levy fines of as much as $5,000 on individual members, and "annul and set aside" the constitution, bylaws, and resolutions and substitute provisions of his own making. The Department of Justice once characterized his powers as "absolute and subject to no control." He uses them bluntly, though occasionally he attempts to dis-already has indicated that he would lift the recording prohibition if some system of royalties could be worked out for the musicians who did the recording. This, unfortunately, requires some friendly federal legislation, which at the moment seems improbable, and it would not materially change the average musician's status. Actually the recording ban

"The Nation" Oct. 3 '42

Mr. Petrillo's Hopeless War

BY CHARLES WILLIAMS

PETRILLO Obstructs War Effort," "Petrillo Perils Free Business," "Petrillo Hits at Heart of Radio" —these and other similar headlines, heavily laden with menace but also having an unwitting note of burlesque, have been appearing regularly on newspaper front pages. They reveal that James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, has succeeded John L. Lewis, at least temporarily, as labor's chief inciter of editorial frenzy.

Petrillo, a cocky Chicago labor politician with a great disdain for public opinion, provoked these outbursts, and also a Congressional investigation, by forbidding his musicians to make recordings for radio stations and juke boxes. He forbade them on the ground that his "boys," the 138,000 members of the musicians' union, were suffering seriously from unemployment. By making recordings, he said, musicians simply were pushing themselves out of jobs. When Elmer Davis, as director of the Office of War Information, protested that lack of recorded music would cripple many small radio stations essential to our national communications system, Petrillo told him that he was "absolutely misinformed" and refused to rescind the ban. Aside from the results already mentioned, his recalcitrance has brought forth a Department of Justice charge of "wrongful and unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in phonograph records, electrical transcriptions, and radio broadcasting."

Actually the ban on recordings, which has been in effect since August 1, was not altogether the act of a "dictator." It was sanctioned by the union's executive board and represents a desperate but probably futile effort to stave off the effects of technological advance. The country's 500,000 juke boxes and the use of "canned" music by hundreds of radio stations have destroyed employment opportunities for thousands of musicians. Many taverns and hotels which formerly employed small bands now use the juke box; it costs less and provides music by Benny Goodman instead of Joe Doakes. Of some 800 radio stations in the United States, fewer than 300 employ musicians; the rest use recordings only. "A good recording," Petrillo has estimated, "costs musicians about a million dollars in wages before it runs its course." Putting aside for the moment the question of whether a good recording is preferable on aesthetic grounds to the nondescript playing of "live" musicians, it is obvious that the A. F. of M. has a case. It becomes even more obvious when one learns that as a rule between 50 and 60 per cent of the A. F. of M.'s members are unemployed. "Justice demands," observed an advertisement inserted by the union in New York City newspapers last month, "that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned' music for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

Unfortunately for the musicians, the reputation of their president is such that it precludes the possibility of any sympathetic public hearing. Petrillo is a perfect justification of Pegler's conception of a labor boss. He receives $46,000 a year in addition to a generous expense account, maintains a suite at the Waldorf, rides around in a huge bullet-proof car, employs six or seven bodyguards, four of whom are relatives, and talks as if he were following a Pegler script. He is high up in the Ed Kelly machine, and fits nicely into the Chicago scene. There is a persistent rumor that he wants to be the city's next mayor. In the American Federation of Musicians his rule is thoroughly despotic. The constitution empowers him to call strikes, levy fines of as much as $5,000 on individual members, and "annul and set aside" the constitution, bylaws, and resolutions and substitute provisions of his own making. The Department of Justice once characterized his powers as "absolute and subject to no control." He uses them bluntly, though occasionally he attempts to dis-already has indicated that he would lift the recording prohibition if some system of royalties could be worked out for the musicians who did the recording. This, unfortunately, requires some friendly federal legislation, which at the moment seems improbable, and it would not materially change the average musician's [illegible] would mean a larger income for the name bands and possibly a larger union relief check for the unemployed, but it would not restore the musician to his pre-juke box position. Small-time musicians have become as obsolete as the Indian. James Caesar Petrillo, for all his confident [illegible]oughness, will not be able to erase that fact.

semble, as when he wrote t[illegible] As national president of the A. F. of M., a position that he was merely a "messen[illegible] inherited in 1940 from Joe Weber, who had held it

The dictatorial strain in its [illegible]ce 1900, Petrillo has won a dozen major battles for mistakable in Petrillo. He [illegible]ofessional musicians. Caring little or nothing for pub- first in December, 1939, wh[illegible] opinion, partly because his Chicago training induced Federation of Musicians he [illegible] belief that "suckers" don't count, he threatened a Man Who Came to Dinn[illegible]ke against a national radio network to force a station "Scandals" to delete all refere[illegible] Louisville to employ six musicians, and he called one National Council on Freedom [illegible]et a slightly better contract for eleven musicians in in this move an ominous new [illegible]burgh. Although newspapers throughout the coun- mediately wired, "Your actio[illegible]aged, he refused to permit radio broadcasts by army which control of an entire pro[illegible]s until the studios had agreed to give "stand-by" a labor union, reflecting its self-[illegible]

A. P. Gardner Post 194, Americ[illegible]

New Box For Flag

[illegible] plans may be made for their activ[illegible] welcome to join and should plan [illegible] do so as early as possible, so th[illegible] girls between the ages of 7 to 10 a[illegible] Elizabeth Walton, announces th[illegible] noons. The Brownie leader, Mr[illegible] which will be held on Monday afte[illegible] plans were made for future meeting[illegible] scrap books for hospitals. Defini[illegible] Thanksgiving and pasting pictures i[illegible] 12 present. Much of the time w[illegible] spent in making place cards [illegible]

NEW BRITAIN, CONN. HERALD

NOV 20 1942

Union Battle Dodged By Boston Symphony

New York, Nov. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra returned last night to begin its 57th season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the sixty-two year old orchestra and the musicians' union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter.

Bows to Union Demand

An agreement has been reached between the Boston Symphony orchestra, previously nonunion, and the American Federation of Musicians, of which James C. Petrillo is president, which will permit the orchestra to carry out its scheduled concerts for this season.

Members of the orchestra are joining the union which in turn has amended its bylaws, to permit the orchestra's conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to hire instrumentalists from any part of the country. Previously under the bylaws of the union he or any other conductor would have been forced to employ only musicians resident in his union area.

The Boston Symphony orchestra had been the only large major one in the country to stay outside the AFM in recent years and the union had been making an especial effort to acquire jurisdiction over it. In Springfield and other cities there had been threats to place halls in which the nonunion orchestra played on the "unfair list" of union musicians.

CHICAGO, ILL. JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NOV 27 1942

Boston Orchestra Won't Deny It's Unionized

BOSTON, Nov. 26 (UP).—Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today refused to confirm or deny a published report that they have come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo.

The report said the orchestra accepted terms of the negotiations which call for numerous concessions on its part.

The Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the United States that has been non-union in recent years. Current negotiations have been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

MILWAUKEE, WIS. JOURNAL

NOV 26 1942

Big Orchestra Is Going Union

From The Journal's N. Y. Bureau

New York, N. Y.—The Boston symphony orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known Wednesday night.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its bylaws so that objections raised by the Boston symphony trustees could be overcome.

Right to Hire, Issue

The Boston symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The bylaws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these bylaws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the bylaws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston symphony.

Clears Up Difficulties

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world famous pianists, violinists, cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear.

The agreement with the union also clears up the orchestra's difficulties with concert halls. Auditoriums in New York, Springfield, Mass., and other cities where the Boston symphony has been scheduled to play on tour have been threatened with being put on the union's "unfair list" if they rented their facilities to a nonunion orchestra. This would have meant the withdrawal of union orchestras from such halls.

The Boston symphony orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record making imposed by Petrillo and the union is lifted. It is believed that conversations between the union and broadcasters and record makers toward composing this dispute are proceeding, though there is no immediate likelihood of a settlement.

ST. LOUIS, MO. STAR-TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Pact With Union Reported

BOSTON, Nov. 26.—(U. P.)—Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today refused to confirm or deny a published report that they have come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo. The Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the United States that has been non-union in recent years.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Union Pact As Petrillo Eases the Rules on Hiring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known last night. The Boston Symphony's acceptance of a union contract came after months of negotiations that had been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston Symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its by-laws so that objections raised by the Boston Symphony trustees could be overcome.

Laws on Hiring Amended

The Boston Symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The by-laws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston Symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Mr. Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these by-laws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the by-laws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Mr. Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston Symphony.

Orchestra May Go on Air Again

It is understood that the Boston Symphony has been negotiating for some months with the Columbia Broadcasting System to resume radio concerts on its network. Completion of a contract has awaited an agreement by the orchestra with the union. It is believed possible that if the Boston Symphony signs to broadcast over the Columbia network, it will eventually agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corporation, a subsidiary of CBS. The Boston Symphony had been for years a bulwark of the RCA-Victor Company's catalogue of recorded masterworks.

The deal with the broadcasting company, if it eventuates, may enable the Boston Symphony to go a long way toward meeting its annual deficit. It is estimated that $75,000 would be involved in a new broadcasting contract. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has recently been conducting a campaign for $180,000 to meet its deficit for last season and this year.

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world-famous pianists, violinists, 'cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear with a nonunion

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record-making imposed by Mr. Petrillo and the union is lifted.

PLANS SHOWDOWN ON PETRILLO BAN

Nov 27 N.Y. Sun

Washington, Nov. 21 (A. P.).—Senator Clark, Democrat, of Idaho, outlined a new effort today to bring the latest recorded music to juke boxes and radio stations through a showdown with James C. Petrillo. He announced that he would call the president of the American Federation of Musicians before an Interstate Commerce committee soon "and see if this labor leader is bigger than the Federal Government."

"There hasn't been a new bit of popular music recorded since August 1, when Petrillo's prohibition against members of his union playing for records became effective," Senator Clark declared.

Senator Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the full committee, appointed Mr. Clark to head a sub-committee to conduct an investigation into Petrillo's activities after a personal attempt to bring about an adjustment of differences between Petrillo and broadcasting stations over the displacement of live musicians.

Mr. Clark said that he would begin hearings about December 7 and would probably invite Petrillo as the first witness. The sub-committee, he added, will consider his bill to make it a violation of the anti-trust laws to conspire or combine to prevent the making of records.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 28 1942

Welcome Settlement Of Music Controversy

There can only be rejoicing that the Boston Symphony orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians have finally made peace, though the official announcement is yet to be released.

To say that this orchestra or that orchestra is the greatest in the country takes either a greater critical appreciation or a greater foolhardiness than most people possess, but it is not purely provincial pride that has made Springfield feel an affection for the Hub orchestra that has made it so frequent and so welcome a visitor here.

The Boston orchestra has few peers and its absence from the radio and recordings, not to mention the limited scope of its tours, all resulting from its quarrel with the union, has been a matter of real concern for all music lovers. The usual labor haters made the fight their own, in the hope of embarrassing the union and all who decline to believe that a union card is a visa for Hades. The only non-union major symphony now becomes unionized.

From the unofficial reports of the concord, there is no question but that the union has won, but there is this point to be made. The union made concessions. It agreed to revise its bylaws in order that the conductor of the orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, might engage men from outside the immediate jurisdiction of the Boston local. Concessions are not within the vocabulary or the imagination of dictators and the fact that the union agreed to give Dr Koussevitzky a free hand in his hiring destroys the opinion that the immovable object had met the irresistible force.

Both sides thought they were in the right, but the full exercise of those rights by both parties resulted in a conflict. The conflict was ended in the American way, the democratic way, when the parties sat down together and came to an agreement.

The settling of this dispute should be a directive to the radio moguls in their current dispute with the musicians about recordings. There, too, is a dispute with right on both sides. How about it, gentlemen, is a little peace too much to expect in this war-torn world?

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 30 1942

Petrillo Wins Again

There was considerable conceding by both sides in the controversy between the American Federation of Musicians and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before the famous musical organization joined the ranks of organized labor.

First, the trustees reversed their former stand and announced that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake. Second, the Federation amended its by-laws to permit the conductor to hire new members wherever he might find them, instead of being bound to engage musicians within the local jurisdiction of the union.

By the agreement between the Federation and the trustees, the famous orchestra now is enabled to return to the radio. and also to make recordings when the ban on recording imposed by James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation, is lifted.

From a financial standpoint the agreement is important to the Boston Symphony, which had a deficit of $180,000 for last season and this year. This should be reduced, if not wiped out, by contracts for broadcasting and recordings.

From the standpoint of freedom of art, however, there has been a distinct loss to the public. The Boston Symphony no longer is independent. Perhaps this culmination of the struggle was inevitable in these days of restricted incomes of those usually best able to join in subsidizing such an organization.

Lovers of music must hope that Mr. Petrillo will not grow so great as to be able to dictate the programs which this and other great orchestras may wish to present. Certainly he has demonstrated tremendous power over the most popular of the cultural arts. The courts have sustained him, and others like him in other fields of unionism. If there is to be salvage of any considerable part of the traditional free enterprise that made America what it is, it must come from Congress.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Agrees to Join Petrillo's Union

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—The two-year-old battle of James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to unionize the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major orchestra in the country that has been non-union in recent years, has finally been crowned with success, it became known tonight.

While neither union nor Boston Symphony officials would comment, they would not deny reports that the orchestra has at last come to an agreement with the union. Formal details of the agreement were expected to be announced shortly.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's fold, who said recently that he would join the union provided the rest of the orchestra did, now will be able to return to radio and recording fields from which he has been barred in the last two years.

The agreement which was finally reached came as a result of concessions made by both the orchestra and the union, it was learned. The Boston Symphony is believed to have won the right to go outside the Boston area to hire instrumentalists.

This had been a major bone of contention, for the by-laws of the A. F. of M. specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men. Mr. Petrillo polled locals of the union by telegraph to have the by-laws amended so that the point could be satisfactorily settled, it was disclosed.

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky admitted recently that the union ban had been a complete success. He said his orchestra had given no broadcasts and made no records in the last two years. He added that Mr. Petrillo also succeeded in cutting down the field of potential guest conductors for the Boston Symphony, through barring members of the union from leading the group.

The agreement with the union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, is expected to have several other beneficial results for the Boston Symphony. For one thing, it will enable the Boston Symphony to make better progress toward meeting its annual deficit, as a result of expected future income from radio broadcasting and recordings. For another thing, it will clear up the Boston Symphony's difficulties in hiring concert halls while on tour.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

NOV 28 1942

SO Joins the Union

Music appears to have won in the agreement finally achieved by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the American Federation of Labor.

Details of the agreement are not known but it is announced that the conductor of the orchestra is given the right to hire instrumentalists from any part of the country instead of being restricted to the local area. That means the conductor may hire the best no matter where the best may be. Something is said too of the right of the conductor to maintain discipline. Here are two factors important in sustaining the high standards maintained for many years by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

After all the discussions, alleged and otherwise that have passed between the orchestra trustees and James C. Petrillo, it must not have been an easy matter for both sides to make the concessions that apparently have been made. The orchestra will lose a certain amount of independence but to offset this, it has not lost its right to maintain a standard and from the financial side, it probably will gain materially from broadcasting and from records.

The settlement is a compromise but so long as music and the public do not suffer, isn't it a satisfactory compromise?

symphony standing capital-by lack deficits.
he only union-on-doma great e of its chestra ding in m any-will not

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 29 1942

Boston

Boston Symphony Unionizes

In New England we have proudly considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the finest gathering of musicians trained to the finest traditions in really good music that could be found in America. Whether or not we are still to consider it such as time moves along we are to see. The heat turned on by James C. (Caesar) Petrillo, fortified by the legislation of the government at Washington, has forced the Symphony into acceptance of unionization. What Petrillo did was to threaten that if any hall allowed the unorganized Boston Symphony to play in it, that hall would have all union musicians of dance bands, or whatever they played in, ruled out of it by the union. The Boston Symphony can play in the open, or at least in an uncontrolled shed in the Berkshire Hills in the summer, but it cannot render concerts in the open in the winter. Hence it has had to yield to Petrillo.

The members of the orchestra were not pressing for union membership. In fact, they had been paid better and treated better than any union musicians in the country at large. There has been some compromise. Petrillo is to be permitted to unionize, but the Petrillo union rule that musicians have to be hired from the home town talent with no bringing in of talent from other cities is waved. Dr. Koussevitzky can hire an artist wherever he finds him. Not all his players will be from unionized Boston.

So the best of music is not immediately ruined by Petrillo. What will happen to it as it attempts to go along its way in union harness remains for the future to show. Its patrons also can stay away from the halls where it plays if it deteriorates, with as disastrous results as would have been effected by Petrillo's ban of the halls.

[122]

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Union Pact As Petrillo Eases the Rules on Hiring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known last night. The Boston Symphony's acceptance of a union contract came after months of negotiations that had been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston Symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its by-laws so that objections raised by the Boston Symphony trustees could be overcome.

Laws on Hiring Amended

The Boston Symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The by-laws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston Symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Mr. Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these by-laws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the by-laws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Mr. Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston Symphony.

Orchestra May Go on Air Again

It is understood that the Boston Symphony has been negotiating for some months with the Columbia Broadcasting System to resume radio concerts on its network. Completion of a contract has awaited an agreement by the orchestra with the union. It is believed possible that if the Boston Symphony signs to broadcast over the Columbia network, it will eventually agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corporation, a subsidiary of CBS. The Boston Symphony had been for years a bulwark of the RCA-Victor Company's catalogue of recorded masterworks.

The deal with the broadcasting company, if it eventuates, may enable the Boston Symphony to go a long way toward meeting its annual deficit. It is estimated that $75,000 would be involved in a new broadcasting contract. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has recently been conducting a campaign for $180,000 to meet its deficit for last season and this year.

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world-famous pianists, violinists, 'cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear with a nonunion

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record-making imposed by Mr. Petrillo and the union is lifted.

PLANS SHOWDOWN ON PETRILLO BAN

Nov 21 N.Y. Sun

Washington, Nov. 21 (A. P.).—Senator Clark, Democrat, of Idaho, outlined a new effort today to bring the latest recorded music to juke boxes and radio stations through a showdown with James C. Petrillo. He announced that he would call the president of the American Federation of Musicians before an Interstate Commerce committee soon "and see if this labor leader is bigger than the Federal Government."

"There hasn't been a new bit of popular music recorded since August 1, when Petrillo's prohibition against members of his union playing for records became effective," Senator Clark declared.

Senator Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the full committee, appointed Mr. Clark to head a sub-committee to conduct an investigation into Petrillo's activities after a personal attempt to bring about an adjustment of differences between Petrillo and broadcasting stations over the displacement of live musicians.

Mr. Clark said that he would begin hearings about December 7 and would probably invite Petrillo as the first witness. The subcommittee, he added, will consider his bill to make it a violation of the anti-trust laws to conspire or combine to prevent the making of records.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 28 1942

Welcome Settlement Of Music Controversy

There can only be rejoicing that the Boston Symphony orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians have finally made peace, though the official announcement is yet to be released.

To say that this orchestra or that orchestra is the greatest in the country takes either a greater critical appreciation or a greater foolhardiness than most people possess, but it is not purely provincial pride that has made Springfield feel an affection for the Hub orchestra that has made it so frequent and so welcome a visitor here.

The Boston orchestra has few peers and its absence from the radio and recordings, not to mention the limited scope of its tours, all resulting from its quarrel with the union, has been a matter of real concern for all music lovers. The usual labor haters made the fight their own, in the hope of embarrassing the union and all who decline to believe that a union card is a visa for Hades. The only non-union major symphony now becomes unionized.

From the unofficial reports of the concord, there is no question but that the union has won, but there is this point to be made. The union made concessions. It agreed to revise its bylaws in order that the conductor of the orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, might engage men from outside the immediate jurisdiction of the Boston local. Concessions are not [illegible] imagina[illegible] fact tha[illegible] Dr Kou[illegible] hiring [illegible] immova[illegible] resistib[illegible]

Both [illegible] the rig[illegible] those [illegible] sulted [illegible] was en[illegible] democr[illegible] sat do[illegible] agreem[illegible]

The [illegible] be a [illegible] in the [illegible] musicia[illegible] too, [illegible] sides [illegible] little [illegible] this [illegible] son was fined $15.

Probation for two years was ordered by Judge Hibbard in a morals charge case to which Mrs. June Roser, 64 Newell Street, pleaded guilty. A drunkenness charge was ordered filed.

A charge of assault and battery against Allen Southard of Hancock was ordered dismissed.

John J. Simpson, 224 Robbins Avenue, pleaded guilty to illegal parking and paid a fine of $3. Leslie P. Chadwell, Williamstown, pleaded guilty to failing to observe a stop sign and paid a fine of $3.

Critically Ill

George A. Denison, 67, of 12 Glenwood Avenue, retired member of the Pittsfield fire department, is critically ill at House of Mercy Hospital. He was admitted for an operation Wednesday evening and pneumonia developed later.

assume the responsibility of distribution of principal and termination of the trust.

Both mother and daughter are still living.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 30 1942

Petrillo Wins Again

There was considerable conceding by both sides in the controversy between the American Federation of Musicians and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before the famous musical organization joined the ranks of organized labor.

First, the trustees reversed their former stand and announced that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake. Second, the Federation amended its by-laws to permit the conductor to hire new members wherever he might find them, instead of being bound to engage musicians within the local jurisdiction of the union.

By the agreement between the Federation and the trustees, the famous orchestra now is enabled to return to the radio. and also to make recordings when the ban on recording imposed by James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation, is lifted.

From a financial standpoint the agreement is important to the Boston Symphony, which had a deficit of $180,000 for last season and this year. This should be reduced, if not wiped out, by contracts for broadcasting and recordings.

From the standpoint of freedom of art, however, there has been a distinct loss to the public. The Boston Symphony no longer is independent. Perhaps this culmination of the struggle was inevitable in these days of restricted incomes of those usually best able to join in subsidizing such an organization.

Lovers of music must hope that Mr. Petrillo will not grow so great as to be able to dictate the programs which this and other great orchestras may wish to present. Certainly he has demonstrated tremendous power over the most popular of the cultural arts. The courts have sustained him, and others like him in other fields of unionism. If there is to be salvage of any considerable part of the traditional free enterprise that made America what it is, it must come from Congress.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Agrees to Join Petrillo's Union

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—The two-year-old battle of James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to unionize the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major orchestra in the country that has been non-union in recent years, has finally been crowned with success, it became known tonight.

While neither union nor Boston Symphony officials would comment, they would not deny reports that the orchestra has at last come to an agreement with the union. Formal details of the agreement were expected to be announced shortly.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's fold, who said recently that he would join the union provided the rest of the orchestra did, now will be able to return to radio and recording fields from which he has been barred in the last two years.

The agreement which was finally reached came as a result of concessions made by both the orchestra and the union, it was learned. The Boston Symphony is believed to have won the right to go outside the Boston area to hire instrumentalists.

This had been a major bone of contention, for the by-laws of the A. F. of M. specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men. Mr. Petrillo polled locals of the union by telegraph to have the by-laws amended so that the point could be satisfactorily settled, it was disclosed.

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky admitted recently that the union ban had been a complete success. He said his orchestra had given no broadcasts and made no records in the last two years. He added that Mr. Petrillo also succeeded in cutting down the field of potential guest conductors for the Boston Symphony, through barring members of the union from leading the group.

The agreement with the union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, is expected to have several other beneficial results for the Boston Symphony. For one thing, it will enable the Boston Symphony to make better progress toward meeting its annual deficit, as a result of expected future income from radio broadcasting and recordings. For another thing, it will clear up the Boston Symphony's difficulties in hiring concert halls while on tour.

THE [illegible]
A FT[illegible]
Or[illegible]
non-un[illegible]
ists w[illegible]
of capi[illegible]
The or[illegible] way it [illegible] control[illegible] inated [illegible] victory [illegible]
Mr. [illegible]
nation[illegible] will n[illegible]
Bostor[illegible] where [illegible] jeopar[illegible]

[illegible]phony
[illegible]anding
[illegible] capital-
[illegible]by lack [illegible] deficits.
[illegible]he only
[illegible] union-
[illegible]on-dom-
[illegible] a great
[illegible]se of its [illegible]rchestra
[illegible]ding in [illegible]em any-
[illegible] will not
[illegible]

Symphony Signs Up.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, ending a long labor controversy. The agreement with James Petrillo will permit the National Symphony orchestra and other musical groups to play in Constitution Hall without arousing the ire of union melody makers, who threatened reprisals if the Boston Symphony was booked. Also permits the famous Hub group of Koussevitsky to appear on the radio. Boston Symphony won some concessions. It is permitted to sign skilled musicians in any jurisdiction if they are qualified to play with symphony groups. Endowment of Boston Symphony prescribed any union contract but this clause was waived in the interest of operating without an annual deficit.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 29 1942

Boston
[illegible]

Boston Symphony Unionizes

In New England we have proudly considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the finest gathering of musicians trained to the finest traditions in really good music that could be found in America. Whether or not we are still to consider it such as time moves along we are to see. The heat turned on by James C. (Caesar) Petrillo, fortified by the legislation of the government at Washington, has forced the Symphony into acceptance of unionization. What Petrillo did was to threaten that if any hall allowed the unorganized Boston Symphony to play in it, that hall would have all union musicians of dance bands, or whatever they played in, ruled out of it by the union. The Boston Symphony can play in the open, or at least in an uncontrolled shed in the Berkshire Hills in the summer, but it cannot render concerts in the open in the winter. Hence it has had to yield to Petrillo.

The members of the orchestra were not pressing for union membership. In fact, they had been paid better and treated better than any union musicians in the country at large. There has been some compromise. Petrillo is to be permitted to unionize, but the Petrillo union rule that musicians have to be hired from the home town talent with no bringing in of talent from other cities is waved. Dr. Koussevitzky can hire an artist wherever he finds him. Not all his players will be from unionized Boston.

So the best of music is not immediately ruined by Petrillo. What will happen to it as it attempts to go along its way in union harness remains for the future to show. Its patrons also can stay away from the halls where it plays if it deteriorates, with as disastrous results as would have been effected by Petrillo's ban of the halls.

[122]

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Union Pact As Petrillo Eases the Rules on Hiring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known last night. The Boston Symphony's acceptance of a union contract came after months of negotiations that had been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston Symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its by-laws so that objections raised by the Boston Symphony trustees could be overcome.

Laws on Hiring Amended

The Boston Symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The by-laws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston Symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Mr. Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these by-laws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the by-laws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Mr. Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston Symphony.

Orchestra May Go on Air Again

It is understood that the Boston Symphony has been negotiating for some months with the Columbia Broadcasting System to resume radio concerts on its network. Completion of a contract has awaited an agreement by the orchestra with the union. It is believed possible that if the Boston Symphony signs to broadcast over the Columbia network, it will eventually agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corporation, a subsidiary of CBS. The Boston Symphony had been for years a bulwark of the RCA-Victor Company's catalogue of recorded masterworks.

The deal with the broadcasting company, if it eventuates, may enable the Boston Symphony to go a long way toward meeting its annual deficit. It is estimated that $75,000 would be involved in a new broadcasting contract. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has recently been conducting a campaign for $180,000 to meet its deficit for last season and this year.

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world-famous pianists, violinists, 'cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear with a nonunion

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record-making imposed by Mr. Petrillo and the union is lifted.

PLANS SHOWDOWN ON PETRILLO BAN

Nov 21 N.Y. Sun

Washington, Nov. 21 (A. P.).—Senator Clark, Democrat, of Idaho, outlined a new effort today to bring the latest recorded music to juke boxes and radio stations through a showdown with James C. Petrillo. He announced that he would call the president of the American Federation of Musicians before an Interstate Commerce committee soon "and see if this labor leader is bigger than the Federal Government."

"There hasn't been a new bit of popular music recorded since August 1, when Petrillo's prohibition against members of his union playing for records became effective," Senator Clark declared.

Senator Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the full committee, appointed Mr. Clark to head a sub-committee to conduct an investigation into Petrillo's activities after a personal attempt to bring about an adjustment of differences between Petrillo and broadcasting stations over the displacement of live musicians.

Mr. Clark said that he would begin hearings about December 7 and would probably invite Petrillo as the first witness. The subcommittee, he added, will consider his bill to make it a violation of the anti-trust laws to conspire or combine to prevent the making of records.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 28 1942

Welcome Settlement Of Music Controversy

There can only be rejoicing that the Boston Symphony orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians have finally made peace, though the official announcement is yet to be released.

To say that this orchestra or that orchestra is the greatest in the country takes either a greater critical appreciation or a greater foolhardiness than most people possess, but it is not purely provincial pride that has made Springfield feel an affection for the Hub orchestra that has made it so frequent and so welcome a visitor here.

The Boston orchestra has few peers and its absence from the radio and recordings, not to mention the limited scope of its tours, all resulting from its quarrel with the union, has been a matter of real concern for all music lovers. The usual labor haters made the fight their own, in the hope of embarrassing the union and all who decline to believe that a union card is a visa for Hades. The only non-union major symphony now becomes unionized.

From the unofficial reports of the concord, there is no question but that the union has won, but there is this point to be made. The union made concessions. It agreed to revise its bylaws in order that the conductor of the orche[illegible] Koussevitzky, migh[illegible] from outside the im[illegible] tion of the Boston [illegible] are not within the [illegible] imagination of di[illegible] fact that the unio[illegible] Dr Koussevitzky a[illegible] hiring destroys th[illegible] immovable object [illegible] resistible force.

Both sides th[illegible] the right, but [illegible] those rights [illegible] sulted in a [illegible] was ended in [illegible] democratic [illegible] sat down to [illegible] agreement.

The settl[illegible] be a direct[illegible] in their [illegible] musician[illegible] too, is [illegible] sides. Bo[illegible] little pe[illegible] this wa[illegible]

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 30 1942

Petrillo Wins Again

There was considerable conceding by both sides in the controversy between the American Federation of Musicians and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before the famous musical organization joined the ranks of organized labor.

First, the trustees reversed their former stand and announced that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake. Second, the Federation amended its by-laws to permit the conductor to hire new members wherever he might find them, instead of being bound to engage musicians within the local jurisdiction of the union.

By the agreement between the Federation and the trustees, the famous orchestra now is enabled to return to the radio. and also to make recordings when the ban on recording imposed by James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation, is lifted.

From a financial standpoint the agreement is important to the Boston Symphony, which had a deficit of $180,000 for last season and this year. This should be reduced, if not wiped out, by contracts for broadcasting and recordings.

From the standpoint of freedom of art, however, there has been a distinct loss to the public. The Boston [illegible] no longer is independent. [illegible] this culmination of the strug- [illegible] inevitable in these days of re- [illegible] incomes of those usually best [illegible] join in subsidizing such an or- [illegible]

[illegible] lovers of music must hope that Mr. [illegible] Petrillo will not grow so great as to [illegible] able to dictate the programs which [illegible] and other great orchestras may [illegible] to present. Certainly he has dem- [illegible] strated tremendous power over the [illegible] most popular of the cultural arts. The [illegible] arts have sustained him, and others [illegible] him in other fields of unionism. If [illegible] ere is to be salvage of any consider- [illegible] ble part of the traditional free enter- [illegible] rise that made America what it is, it [illegible] must come from Congress.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Agrees to Join Petrillo's Union

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—The two-year-old battle of James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to unionize the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major orchestra in the country that has been non-union in recent years, has finally been crowned with success, it became known tonight.

While neither union nor Boston Symphony officials would comment, they would not deny reports that the orchestra has at last come to an agreement with the union. Formal details of the agreement were expected to be announced shortly.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's fold, who said recently that he would join the union provided the rest of the orchestra did, now will be able to return to radio and recording fields from which he has been barred in the last two years.

The agreement which was finally reached came as a result of concessions made by both the orchestra and the union, it was learned. The Boston Symphony is believed to have won the right to go outside the Boston area to hire instrumentalists.

This had been a major bone of contention, for the by-laws of the A. F. of M. specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men. Mr. Petrillo polled locals of the union by telegraph to have the by-laws amended so that the point could be satisfactorily settled, it was disclosed.

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky admitted recently that the union ban had been a complete success. He said his orchestra had given no broadcasts and made no records in the last two years. He added that Mr. Petrillo also succeeded in cutting down the field of potential guest conductors for the Boston Symphony, through barring members of the union from leading the group.

The agreement with the union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, is expected to have several other beneficial results for the Boston Symphony. For one thing, it will enable the Boston Symphony to make better progress toward meeting its annual deficit, as a result of expected future income from radio broadcasting and recordings. For another thing, it will clear up the Boston Symphony's difficulties in hiring concert halls while on tour.

THE [illegible]
A[illegible] [illegible]phony
Or[illegible] [illegible]anding non-uni[illegible] [illegible]capitalists wh[illegible] [illegible]by lack of capi[illegible] [illegible]deficits.
The or[illegible] [illegible]the only way it [illegible]n union-contro[illegible] [illegible]on-dominated [illegible] [illegible]a great victory [illegible]
Mr. [illegible] [illegible]se of its nation[illegible] [illegible]rchestra will [illegible] [illegible]ding in Bostor[illegible] [illegible]em anywhere [illegible] will not jeopar[illegible]

Three cheers for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Don't ~~think for a moment~~ that the arrogant James C. Petrillo came out top man in the signing of that Boston Symphony Orchestra contract. The Symphony has maintained for many years that it would not enter any agreement which would in any way hamper the maintenance of its strict artistic standards. Its musicians were kept satisfied with higher than union wages. The Boston Symphony maintained that the American Federation of Musicians rules would lower its musical standards and so it stayed out, at considerable financial sacrifice. Now it is in, because Mr. Petrillo changed his rules to accommodate the august body. It means higher musical standards all around.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 29 1942

Boston ~~Or~~ Or-

Boston Symphony Unionizes

In New England we have proudly considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the finest gathering of musicians trained to the finest traditions in really good music that could be found in America. Whether or not we are still to consider it such as time moves along we are to see. The heat turned on by James C. (Caesar) Petrillo, fortified by the legislation of the ~~government~~ at Washington, has forced the Symphony into acceptance of unionization. What Petrillo did was to threaten that if any hall allowed the unorganized Boston Symphony to play in it, that hall would have all union musicians of dance bands, or whatever they played in, ruled out of it by the union. The Boston Symphony can play in the open, or at least in an uncontrolled shed in the Berkshire Hills in the summer, but it cannot render concerts in the open in the winter. Hence it has had to yield to Petrillo.

The members of the orchestra were not pressing for union membership. In fact, they had been paid better and treated better than any union musicians in the country at large. There has been some compromise. Petrillo is to be permitted to unionize, but the Petrillo union rule that musicians have to be hired from the home town talent with no bringing in of talent from other cities is waved. Dr. Koussevitzky can hire an artist wherever he finds him. Not all his players will be from unionized Boston.

So the best of music is not immediately ruined by Petrillo. What will happen to it as it attempts to go along its way in union harness remains for the future to show. Its patrons also can stay away from the halls where it plays if it deteriorates, with as disastrous results as would have been effected by Petrillo's ban of the halls.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Union Pact As Petrillo Eases the Rules on Hiring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known last night. The Boston Symphony's acceptance of a union contract came after months of negotiations that had been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston Symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its by-laws so that objections raised by the Boston Symphony trustees could be overcome.

Laws on Hiring Amended

The Boston Symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The by-laws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston Symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Mr. Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these by-laws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the by-laws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Mr. Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston Symphony.

Orchestra May Go on Air Again

It is understood that the Boston Symphony has been negotiating for some months with the Columbia Broadcasting System to resume radio concerts on its network. Completion of a contract has awaited an agreement by the orchestra with the union. It is believed possible that if the Boston Symphony signs to broadcast over the Columbia network, it will eventually agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corporation, a subsidiary of CBS. The Boston Symphony had been for years a bulwark of the RCA-Victor Company's catalogue of recorded masterworks.

The deal with the broadcasting company, if it eventuates, may enable the Boston Symphony to go a long way toward meeting its annual deficit. It is estimated that $75,000 would be involved in a new broadcasting contract. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has recently been conducting a campaign for $180,000 to meet its deficit for last season and this year.

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world-famous pianists, violinists, 'cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear with a nonunion

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record-making imposed by Mr. Petrillo and the union is lifted.

PLANS SHOWDOWN ON PETRILLO BAN

Nov 27 N.Y. Sun

Washington, Nov. 21 (A. P.).—Senator Clark, Democrat, of Idaho, outlined a new effort today to bring the latest recorded music to juke boxes and radio stations through a showdown with James C. Petrillo. He announced that he would call the president of the American Federation of Musicians before an Interstate Commerce committee soon "and see if this labor leader is bigger than the Federal Government."

"There hasn't been a new bit of popular music recorded since August 1, when Petrillo's prohibition against members of his union playing for records became effective," Senator Clark declared.

Senator Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the full committee, appointed Mr. Clark to head a sub-committee to conduct an investigation into Petrillo's activities after a personal attempt to bring about an adjustment of differences between Petrillo and broadcasting stations over the displacement of live musicians.

Mr. Clark said that he would begin hearings about December 7 and would probably invite Petrillo as the first witness. The subcommittee, he added, will consider his bill to make it a violation of the anti-trust laws to conspire or combine to prevent the making of records.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 28 1942

Welcome Settlement Of Music Controversy

There can only be rejoicing that the Boston Symphony orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians have finally made peace, though the official announcement is yet to be released.

To say that this orchestra or that orchestra is the greatest in the country takes either a greater critical appreciation or a greater foolhardiness than most people possess, but it is not purely provincial pride that has made Springfield feel an affection for the Hub orchestra that has made it so frequent and so welcome a visitor here.

The Boston orchestra has few peers and its absence from the radio and recordings, not to mention the limited scope of its tours, all resulting from its quarrel with the union, has been a matter of real concern for all music lovers. The usual labor haters made the fight their own, in the hope of embarrassing the union and all who decline to believe that a union card is a visa for Hades. The only non-union major symphony now becomes unionized.

From the unofficial reports of the concord there [illegible]

Aircraft carrier Death.
Two cruisers.

MATURE ON C. G. DUTY AT BOSTON

BOSTON, (U.P.)—Movie Actor Victor Mature reported for duty at Coast Guard divisional headquarters here today after serving five months on the Pacific coast. "I don't know what I am to do," he said. "That's up to my commanding officer."

The average freight train today runs 56 per cent faster than in 1920 and carries 40 per cent more pleaded guilty to failing to observe a stop sign and paid a fine of $3.

Critically Ill

George A. Denison, 67, of 12 Glenwood Avenue, retired member of the Pittsfield fire department, is critically ill at House of Mercy Hospital. He was admitted for an operation Wednesday evening and pneumonia developed later.

assume the responsibility of distribution of principal and termination of the trust.

Both mother and daughter are still living.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 30 1942

Petrillo Wins Again

There was considerable conceding by both sides in the controversy between the American Federation of Musicians and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before the famous musical organization joined the ranks of organized labor.

First, the trustees reversed their former stand and announced that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake. Second, the Federation amended its by-laws to permit the conductor to hire new members wherever he might find them, instead of being bound to engage musicians within the local jurisdiction of the union.

By the agreement between the Federation and the trustees, the famous orchestra now is enabled to return to the radio. and also to make recordings when the ban on recording imposed by James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation, is lifted.

From a financial standpoint the agreement is important to the Boston Symphony, which had a deficit of $180,000 for last season and this year. This should be reduced, if not wiped out, by contracts for broadcasting and recordings.

From the standpoint of freedom of art, however, there has been a distinct loss to the public. The Boston Symphony no longer is independent. Perhaps this culmination of the struggle was inevitable in these days of restricted incomes of those usually best able to join in subsidizing such an organization.

Lovers of music must hope that Mr. Petrillo will not grow so great as to be able to dictate the programs which this and other great orchestras may wish to present. Certainly he has demonstrated tremendous power over the most popular of the cultural arts. The courts have sustained him, and others like him in other fields of unionism. If there is to be salvage of any considerable part of the traditional free enterprise that made America what it is, it must come from Congress.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Agrees to Join Petrillo's Union

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—The two-year-old battle of James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to unionize the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major orchestra in the country that has been non-union in recent years, has finally been crowned with success, it became known tonight.

While neither union nor Boston Symphony officials would comment, they would not deny reports that the orchestra has at last come to an agreement with the union. Formal details of the agreement were expected to be announced shortly.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's fold, who said recently that he would join the union provided the rest of the orchestra did, now will be able to return to radio and recording fields from which he has been barred in the last two years.

The agreement which was finally reached came as a result of concessions made by both the orchestra and the union, it was learned. The Boston Symphony is believed to have won the right to go outside the Boston area to hire instrumentalists.

This had been a major bone of contention, for the by-laws of the A. F. of M. specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men. Mr. Petrillo polled locals of the union by telegraph to have the by-laws amended so that the point could be satisfactorily settled, it was disclosed.

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky admitted recently that the union ban had been a complete success. He said his orchestra had given no broadcasts and made no records in the last two years. He added that Mr. Petrillo also succeeded in cutting down the field of potential guest conductors for the Boston Symphony, through barring members of the union from leading the group.

The agreement with the union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, is expected to have several other beneficial results for the Boston Symphony. For one thing, it will enable the Boston Symphony to make better progress toward meeting its annual deficit, as a result of expected future income from radio broadcasting and recordings. For another thing, it will clear up the Boston Symphony's difficulties in hiring concert halls while on tour.

THE

AFTER an [illegible] years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has surrendered. The outstanding non-union orchestra is to be unionized. The capitalists who controlled it have been defeated by lack of capital. They found it too hard to fill the deficits. The orchestra must earn more money, and the only way it could do so was by playing concerts in union-controlled halls, and broadcasting from union-dominated stations. Therefore, union now, and a great victory for James C. Petrillo.

Mr. Petrillo made one concession. Because of its national and international reputation, the Orchestra will not be limited to union players residing in Boston and its environs, but can engage them anywhere in the country. Thus the agreement will not jeopardize its quality.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 29 1942

Boston

Boston Symphony Unionizes

In New England we have proudly considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the finest gathering of musicians trained to the finest traditions in really good music that could be found in America. Whether or not we are still to consider it such as time moves along we are to see. The heat turned on by James C. (Caesar) Petrillo, fortified by the legislation of the government at Washington, has forced the Symphony into acceptance of unionization. What Petrillo did was to threaten that if any hall allowed the unorganized Boston Symphony to play in it, that hall would have all union musicians of dance bands, or whatever they played in, ruled out of it by the union. The Boston Symphony can play in the open, or at least in an uncontrolled shed in the Berkshire Hills in the summer, but it cannot render concerts in the open in the winter. Hence it has had to yield to Petrillo.

The members of the orchestra were not pressing for union membership. In fact, they had been paid better and treated better than any union musicians in the country at large. There has been some compromise. Petrillo is to be permitted to unionize, but the Petrillo union rule that musicians have to be hired from the home town talent with no bringing in of talent from other cities is waved. Dr. Koussevitzky can hire an artist wherever he finds him. Not all his players will be from unionized Boston.

So the best of music is not immediately ruined by Petrillo. What will happen to it as it attempts to go along its way in union harness remains for the future to show. Its patrons also can stay away from the halls where it plays if it deteriorates, with as disastrous results as would have been effected by Petrillo's ban of the halls.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Union Pact As Petrillo Eases the Rules on Hiring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known last night. The Boston Symphony's acceptance of a union contract came after months of negotiations that had been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston Symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its by-laws so that objections raised by the Boston Symphony trustees could be overcome.

Laws on Hiring Amended

The Boston Symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The by-laws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston Symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Mr. Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these by-laws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the by-laws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Mr. Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston Symphony.

Orchestra May Go on Air Again

It is understood that the Boston Symphony has been negotiating for some months with the Columbia Broadcasting System to resume radio concerts on its network. Completion of a contract has awaited an agreement by the orchestra with the union. It is believed possible that if the Boston Symphony signs to broadcast over the Columbia network, it will eventually agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corporation, a subsidiary of CBS. The Boston Symphony had been for years a bulwark of the RCA-Victor Company's catalogue of recorded masterworks.

The deal with the broadcasting company, if it eventuates, may enable the Boston Symphony to go a long way toward meeting its annual deficit. It is estimated that $75,000 would be involved in a new broadcasting contract. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has recently been conducting a campaign for $180,000 to meet its deficit for last season and this year.

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world-famous pianists, violinists, 'cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear with a nonunion

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record-making imposed by Mr. Petrillo and the union is lifted.

PLANS SHOWDOWN ON PETRILLO BAN

Nov 21 N.Y. Sun

Washington, Nov. 21 (A. P.).—Senator Clark, Democrat, of Idaho, outlined a new effort today to bring the latest recorded music to juke boxes and radio stations through a showdown with James C. Petrillo. He announced that he would call the president of the American Federation of Musicians before an Interstate Commerce committee soon "and see if this labor leader is bigger than the Federal Government."

"There hasn't been a new bit of popular music recorded since August 1, when Petrillo's prohibition against members of his union playing for records became effective," Senator Clark declared.

Senator Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the full committee, appointed Mr. Clark to head a sub-committee to conduct an investigation into Petrillo's activities after a personal attempt to bring about an adjustment of differences between Petrillo and broadcasting stations over the displacement of live musicians.

Mr. Clark said that he would begin hearings about December 7 and would probably invite Petrillo as the first witness. The subcommittee, he added, will consider his bill to make it a violation of the anti-trust laws to conspire or combine to prevent the making of records.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Agrees to Join Petrillo's Union

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—The two-year-old battle of James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to unionize the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major orchestra in the country that has been non-union in recent years, has finally been crowned with success, it became known tonight.

While neither union nor Boston Symphony officials would comment, they would not deny reports that the orchestra has at last come to an agreement with the union. Formal details of the agreement were expected to be announced shortly.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's fold, who said recently that he would join the union provided the rest of the orchestra did, now will be able to return to radio and recording fields from which he has been barred in the last two years.

The agreement which was finally reached came as a result of concessions made by both the orchestra and the union, it was learned. The Boston Symphony is believed to have won the right to go outside the Boston area to hire instrumentalists.

This had been a major bone of contention, for the by-laws of the A. F. of M. specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men. Mr. Petrillo polled locals of the union by telegraph to have the by-laws amended so that the point could be satisfactorily settled, it was disclosed.

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky admitted recently that the union ban had been a complete success. He said his orchestra had given no broadcasts and made no records in the last two years. He added that Mr. Petrillo also succeeded in cutting down the field of potential guest conductors for the Boston Symphony, through barring members of the union from leading the group.

The agreement with the union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, is expected to have several other beneficial results for the Boston Symphony. For one thing, it will enable the Boston Symphony to make better progress toward meeting its annual deficit, as a result of expected future income from radio broadcasting and recordings. For another thing, it will clear up the Boston Symphony's difficulties in hiring concert halls while on tour.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 28 1942

Welcome Settlement Of Music Controversy

There can only be rejoicing that the Boston Symphony orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians have finally made peace, though the official announcement is yet to be released.

To say that this orchestra or that orchestra is the greatest in the country takes either a greater critical appreciation or a greater foolhardiness than most people possess, but it is not purely provincial pride that has made Springfield feel an affection for the Hub orchestra that has made it so frequent and so welcome a visitor here.

The Boston orchestra has few peers and its absence from the radio and recordings, not to mention the limited scope of its tours, all resulting from its quarrel with the union, has been a matter of real concern for all music lovers. The usual labor haters made the fight their own, in the hope of embarrassing the union and all who decline to believe that a union card is a visa for Hades. The only non-union major symphony now becomes unionized.

From the unofficial reports of the concord, there is no question but that the union has won, but there is this point to be made. The union made concessions. It agreed to revise its bylaws in order that the conductor of the orche[illegible] Koussevitzky, migh[illegible] from outside the i[illegible] tion of the Boston [illegible] are not within the [illegible] imagination of di[illegible] fact that the unio[illegible] Dr Koussevitzky [illegible] hiring destroys th[illegible] immovable object [illegible] resistible force.

Both sides tho[illegible] the right, but t[illegible] those rights b[illegible] sulted in a [illegible] was ended in [illegible] democratic [illegible] sat down to[illegible] agreement.

The settl[illegible] be a direct[illegible] in their [illegible] musicians [illegible] too, is a [illegible] sides. Ho[illegible] little pe[illegible] this war[illegible]

THE [illegible]
A[illegible]
non-un[illegible]
ists w[illegible]
of cap[illegible]
The o[illegible] way i[illegible] contr[illegible] inate[illegible]
victo[illegible]
Mr [illegible]
natio[illegible] will [illegible]
Bost[illegible]
wher[illegible] jeops[illegible]

[illegible]hony
[illegible]nding
[illegible]apital-
[illegible]y lack [illegible] deficits.
[illegible]he only
[illegible] union-
[illegible]n-dom-
[illegible] great [illegible]e of its [illegible]chestra
[illegible]ding in [illegible]m any-
[illegible] will not

Three cheers for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Don't ~~think for a moment that~~ the arrogant James C. Petrillo came out top man in the signing of that Boston Symphony Orchestra contract. The Symphony has maintained for many years that it would not enter any agreement which would in any way hamper the maintenance of its strict artistic standards. Its musicians were kept satisfied with higher than union wages. The Boston Symphony maintained that the American Federation of Musicians rules would lower its musical standards and so it stayed out, at considerable financial sacrifice. Now it is in, because Mr. Petrillo changed his rules to accommodate the august body. It means higher musical standards all around.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 30 1942

Petrillo Wins Again

There was considerable conceding by both sides in the controversy between the American Federation of Musicians and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before the famous musical organization joined the ranks of organized labor.

First, the trustees reversed their former stand and announced that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake. Second, the Federation amended its by-laws to permit the conductor to hire new members wherever he might find them, instead of being bound to engage musicians within the local jurisdiction of the union.

By the agreement between the Federation and the trustees, the famous orchestra now is enabled to return to the radio. and also to make recordings when the ban on recording imposed by James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation, is lifted.

From a financial standpoint the agreement is important to the Boston Symphony, which had a deficit of $180,000 for last season and this year. This should be reduced, if not wiped out, by contracts for broadcasting and recordings.

From the standpoint of freedom of art, however, there has been a dis[illegible] loss to the public. The Boston [illegible] no longer is independent. [illegible] this culmination of the strug[illegible] inevitable in these days of re[illegible] incomes of those usually best [illegible] join in subsidizing such an or[illegible]ation.

[illegible]ers of music must hope that Mr. [illegible]llo will not grow so great as to [illegible]ble to dictate the programs which [illegible] and other great orchestras may [illegible] to present. Certainly he has dem[illegible]trated tremendous power over the [illegible]st popular of the cultural arts. The [illegible]rts have sustained him, and others [illegible] him in other fields of unionism. If [illegible]ere is to be salvage of any consider[illegible]le part of the traditional free enter[illegible]se that made America what it is, it [illegible]st come from Congress.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 29 1942

Boston Symphony Unionizes

In New England we have proudly considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the finest gathering of musicians trained to the finest traditions in really good music that could be found in America. Whether or not we are still to consider it such as time moves along we are to see. The heat turned on by James C. (Caesar) Petrillo, fortified by the legislation of the government at Washington, has forced the Symphony into acceptance of unionization. What Petrillo did was to threaten that if any hall allowed the unorganized Boston Symphony to play in it, that hall would have all union musicians of dance bands, or whatever they played in, ruled out of it by the union. The Boston Symphony can play in the open, or at least in an uncontrolled shed in the Berkshire Hills in the summer, but it cannot render concerts in the open in the winter. Hence it has had to yield to Petrillo.

The members of the orchestra were not pressing for union membership. In fact, they had been paid better and treated better than any union musicians in the country at large. There has been some compromise. Petrillo is to be permitted to unionize, but the Petrillo union rule that musicians have to be hired from the home town talent with no bringing in of talent from other cities is waved. Dr. Koussevitzky can hire an artist wherever he finds him. Not all his players will be from unionized Boston.

So the best of music is not immediately ruined by Petrillo. What will happen to it as it attempts to go along its way in union harness remains for the future to show. Its patrons also can stay away from the halls where it plays if it deteriorates, with as disastrous results as would have been effected by Petrillo's ban of the halls.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Union Pact As Petrillo Eases the Rules on Hiring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major ensemble in the United States that had been nonunion in recent years, has come to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo, it became known last night. The Boston Symphony's acceptance of a union contract came after months of negotiations that had been preceded by years of attack and counter-attack.

The agreement was arrived at as a result of concessions. The Boston Symphony trustees announced early last month that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake, but this position was a reversal of the attitude of leading trustees several years ago. The union, for its part, went to exceptional lengths to amend its by-laws so that objections raised by the Boston Symphony trustees could be overcome.

Laws on Hiring Amended

The Boston Symphony officials insisted that the chief stumbling block in the final stages of negotiations concerned the right of the conductor to hire personnel and maintain discipline. The by-laws of the federation, it was pointed out, stipulated that a conductor could not go outside of the local jurisdiction if he wished to hire a new man. The Boston Symphony demanded the right to hire an instrumentalist from any part of the country, if there was a better one to be found outside of Boston.

Mr. Petrillo had maintained in negotiations that these by-laws could not be amended except at the annual convention of his union. But to cut the negotiations short, he polled the locals by telegraph. The proposal to amend the by-laws was upheld.

The agreement with the union will enable the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, to return to the radio and recording studios. On Aug. 13, 1940, Mr. Petrillo and the union had the orchestra barred from these channels of performance and income by threatening to pull out all union players if radio and record companies, with closed shop agreements with the union, put on performances by the Boston Symphony.

Orchestra May Go on Air Again

It is understood that the Boston Symphony has been negotiating for some months with the Columbia Broadcasting System to resume radio concerts on its network. Completion of a contract has awaited an agreement by the orchestra with the union. It is believed possible that if the Boston Symphony signs to broadcast over the Columbia network, it will eventually agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corporation, a subsidiary of CBS. The Boston Symphony had been for years a bulwark of the RCA-Victor Company's catalogue of recorded masterworks.

The deal with the broadcasting company, if it eventuates, may enable the Boston Symphony to go a long way toward meeting its annual deficit. It is estimated that $75,000 would be involved in a new broadcasting contract. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has recently been conducting a campaign for $180,000 to meet its deficit for last season and this year.

The agreement with the union will enable the orchestra to resume the engagement of eminent instrumentalists and conductors for guest appearances. In recent years a number of world-famous pianists, violinists, 'cellists and conductors, all of whom are members of the American Federation of Musicians, have been denied permission by the union to appear with a nonunion

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's return to the making of records cannot take place until the ban against all record-making imposed by Mr. Petrillo and the union is lifted.

PLANS SHOWDOWN ON PETRILLO BAN

Nov 27 N.Y. Sun

Washington, Nov. 21 (A. P.).—Senator Clark, Democrat, of Idaho, outlined a new effort today to bring the latest recorded music to juke boxes and radio stations through a showdown with James C. Petrillo. He announced that he would call the president of the American Federation of Musicians before an Interstate Commerce committee soon "and see if this labor leader is bigger than the Federal Government."

"There hasn't been a new bit of popular music recorded since August 1, when Petrillo's prohibition against members of his union playing for records became effective," Senator Clark declared.

Senator Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the full committee, appointed Mr. Clark to head a sub-committee to conduct an investigation into Petrillo's activities after a personal attempt to bring about an adjustment of differences between Petrillo and broadcasting stations over the displacement of live musicians.

Mr. Clark said that he would begin hearings about December 7 and would probably invite Petrillo as the first witness. The subcommittee, he added, will consider his bill to make it a violation of the anti-trust laws to conspire or combine to prevent the making of records.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

NOV 28 1942

Welcome Settlement Of Music Controversy

There can only be rejoicing that the Boston Symphony orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians have finally made peace, though the official announcement is yet to be released.

To say that this orchestra or that orchestra is the greatest in the country takes either a greater critical appreciation or a greater foolhardiness than most people possess, but it is not purely provincial pride that has made Springfield feel an affection for the Hub orchestra that has made it so frequent and so welcome a visitor here.

The Boston orchestra has few peers and its absence from the radio and recordings, not to mention the limited scope of its tours, all resulting from its quarrel with the union, has been a matter of real concern for all music lovers. The usual labor haters made the fight their own, in the hope of embarrassing the union and all who decline to believe that a union card is a visa for Hades. The only non-union major symphony now becomes unionized.

From the unofficial reports of the concord there is Aircraft carrier Beam.

Two cruisers.

MATURE ON C. G. DUTY AT BOSTON

BOSTON, (U.P.)—Movie Actor Victor Mature reported for duty at Coast Guard divisional headquarters here today after serving five months on the Pacific coast. "I don't know what I am to do," he said. "That's up to my commanding officer."

The average freight train today runs 56 per cent faster than in 1920 and carries 40 per cent more pleaded guilty to failing to observe a stop sign and paid a fine of $3.

Critically Ill

George A. Denison, 67, of 12 Glenwood Avenue, retired member of the Pittsfield fire department, is critically ill at House of Mercy Hospital. He was admitted for an operation Wednesday evening and pneumonia developed later.

assume the responsibility of distribution of principal and termination of the trust.

Both mother and daughter are still living.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 30 1942

Petrillo Wins Again

There was considerable conceding by both sides in the controversy between the American Federation of Musicians and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before the famous musical organization joined the ranks of organized labor.

First, the trustees reversed their former stand and announced that the principles of unionism and collective bargaining were not at stake. Second, the Federation amended its by-laws to permit the conductor to hire new members wherever he might find them, instead of being bound to engage musicians within the local jurisdiction of the union.

By the agreement between the Federation and the trustees, the famous orchestra now is enabled to return to the radio. and also to make recordings when the ban on recording imposed by James C. Petrillo, head of the Federation, is lifted.

From a financial standpoint the agreement is important to the Boston Symphony, which had a deficit of $180,000 for last season and this year. This should be reduced, if not wiped out, by contracts for broadcasting and recordings.

From the standpoint of freedom of art, however, there has been a distinct loss to the public. The Boston Symphony no longer is independent. Perhaps this culmination of the struggle was inevitable in these days of restricted incomes of those usually best able to join in subsidizing such an organization.

Lovers of music must hope that Mr. Petrillo will not grow so great as to be able to dictate the programs which this and other great orchestras may wish to present. Certainly he has demonstrated tremendous power over the most popular of the cultural arts. The courts have sustained him, and others like him in other fields of unionism. If there is to be salvage of any considerable part of the traditional free enterprise that made America what it is, it must come from Congress.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NOV 26 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Agrees to Join Petrillo's Union

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—The two-year-old battle of James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to unionize the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major orchestra in the country that has been non-union in recent years, has finally been crowned with success, it became known tonight.

While neither union nor Boston Symphony officials would comment, they would not deny reports that the orchestra has at last come to an agreement with the union. Formal details of the agreement were expected to be announced shortly.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's fold, who said recently that he would join the union provided the rest of the orchestra did, now will be able to return to radio and recording fields from which he has been barred in the last two years.

The agreement which was finally reached came as a result of concessions made by both the orchestra and the union, it was learned. The Boston Symphony is believed to have won the right to go outside the Boston area to hire instrumentalists.

This had been a major bone of contention, for the by-laws of the A. F. of M. specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men. Mr. Petrillo polled locals of the union by telegraph to have the by-laws amended so that the point could be satisfactorily settled, it was disclosed.

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky admitted recently that the union ban had been a complete success. He said his orchestra had given no broadcasts and made no records in the last two years. He added that Mr. Petrillo also succeeded in cutting down the field of potential guest conductors for the Boston Symphony, through barring members of the union from leading the group.

The agreement with the union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, is expected to have several other beneficial results for the Boston Symphony. For one thing, it will enable the Boston Symphony to make better progress toward meeting its annual deficit, as a result of expected future income from radio broadcasting and recordings. For another thing, it will clear up the Boston Symphony's difficulties in hiring concert halls while on tour.

THE

AFTER an [illegible] years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has surrendered. The outstanding non-union orchestra is to be unionized. The capitalists who controlled it have been defeated by lack of capital. They found it too hard to fill the deficits. The orchestra must earn more money, and the only way it could do so was by playing concerts in union-controlled halls, and broadcasting from union-dominated stations. Therefore, union now, and a great victory for James C. Petrillo.

Mr. Petrillo made one concession. Because of its national and international reputation, the Orchestra will not be limited to union players residing in Boston and its environs, but can engage them anywhere in the country. Thus the agreement will not jeopardize its quality.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

NOV 29 1942

Boston Symphony Unionizes

In New England we have proudly considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the finest gathering of musicians trained to the finest traditions in really good music that could be found in America. Whether or not we are still to consider it such as time moves along we are to see. The heat turned on by James C. (Caesar) Petrillo, fortified by the legislation of the government at Washington, has forced the Symphony into acceptance of unionization. What Petrillo did was to threaten that if any hall allowed the unorganized Boston Symphony to play in it, that hall would have all union musicians of dance bands, or whatever they played in, ruled out of it by the union. The Boston Symphony can play in the open, or at least in an uncontrolled shed in the Berkshire Hills in the summer, but it cannot render concerts in the open in the winter. Hence it has had to yield to Petrillo.

The members of the orchestra were not pressing for union membership. In fact, they had been paid better and treated better than any union musicians in the country at large. There has been some compromise. Petrillo is to be permitted to unionize, but the Petrillo union rule that musicians have to be hired from the home town talent with no bringing in of talent from other cities is waved. Dr. Koussevitzky can hire an artist wherever he finds him. Not all his players will be from unionized Boston.

So the best of music is not immediately ruined by Petrillo. What will happen to it as it attempts to go along its way in union harness remains for the future to show. Its patrons also can stay away from the halls where it plays if it deteriorates, with as disastrous results as would have been effected by Petrillo's ban of the halls.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NOV 29 1942

ORCHESTRA IN UNION

Effects of Agreement Between Boston Symphony and Musicians Federation

By OLIN DOWNES

THE deadlock between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians Union has ended. The Boston orchestra, whose founder, Major Henry L. Higginson, would rather have had the orchestra pass out of existence than see it happen, has joined the union. The union, on its side, has yielded some very important points on procedure to the orchestra. The arrangement is such as to benefit both parties to the agreement, and to raise standards of orchestra personnel and symphonic performance the country over.

It need not be claimed that the considerations which brought the orchestra and the union together were of the purely artistic order, or that the intense and bitter antagonisms of the past were not in the historical background of the picture. Irresistible forces of this period compelled cooperative action on both sides. It was not merely the sentiment that is now nation-wide for collective action and bargaining. It was plain facts.

Weapons of Each Side

The orchestra faced an economic problem which was anything but a simple one. The union faced a situation which made it imperative that the finest existing symphony orchestra, and the one orchestra which had quietly and successfully resisted up to the present time every pressure to force it to do so, should come into the fold. One of the union's cards in the game might be designated as force majeur, in the form of the edict it could issue to the radio and record companies, forbidding them under the letter of contractual agreement to cease broadcasting or record-making of Boston Symphony performances.

It was a powerful weapon in the situation but not one to which the Boston Symphony would necessarily have yielded if it had not been able to secure modifications in union regulations of the past affecting the orchestra's rights in the engagement of players, the adjustment of rehearsal hours and associated matters which could affect standards of personnel and performance, and the complete freedom of the organiaztion to pursue its artistic purposes unhindered by union red tape or supervision. It is distinctly to the credit of Mr. Petrillo and his cohorts that they saw the point, realized the temper of the organization with which they were dealing and sufficiently modified their conditions to change the whole orchestral situation in this country.

Old Methods Going

We spoke of the conditions which had acted behind the scenes in this little drama of adjustment. The day when public-spirited patrons of art will pay individually the heavy deficits of a symphony orchestra season, and dictate policy in so doing, are nearing their end. The older principles of orchestra maintenance still operate in this city, where the Philharmonic-Symphony deficits are met by individuals, especially one individual of the orchestra board, who put their hands in their pockets and pay the bills without which the orchestra would pass out of existence.

It is New York's good fortune that this is so, and we have in other places munificent persons whose aid to serious music puts the community and also the professional musicians very much in their debt. But this is not a condition that can be reckened upon much longer, or one upon which musical unionism can impose. The financial aid upon which orchestras and opera companies which observe union wage scales must in part rely is the income to be derived from radio sponsors and from record sales. In Boston, since the death of the late Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees, there was no person or group of persons willing to meet from their own resources the deficit which accrued, in spite of admirably efficient and economical management, at the end of each season. The Bostonians were faced with a fact. The resumption of radio and record engagements would almost certainly enable the orchestra to wipe out its annual deficits and operate on a balanced budget. This could not be ignored.

In the meantime, and most fortunately, there had come about in the space of a very few years an amazing change in the artistic status of the young American orchestra player. Until the time of the First World War the best players, with some notable exceptions, were those who came from Europe. Those players had a technical and stylistic endowment that few American trained musicians could boast. The Boston orchestra and the other orchestras who sought its level of excellence combed the European field for their personnel.

Problems of Import

Then came labor laws and more latterly quota rulings which made it much harder to get foreign artists into the country and the orchestras than had been the case before. A player from Europe, especially one who intended to enter the Boston Symphony, went through a long legal rigmarole before he could join. He had to enter the country as a visitor, stay here a certain number of months, then be offered a contract by the Boston Symphony and finally be enrolled. Naturally, when a musician from overseas took such an important step he insisted upon a good contract and a fairly long one. This made for rigidity in the arrangements.

Today the best orchestral players are American. It is incontestably the fact, resulting partly from the devastation of the world wars, but also from the sound training young orchestral musicians undergo in our high schools and in some universities and leading American music schools today. Each season a number of remarkably equipped young men, and women too, come from these sources. Even if there were not labor and emigration restrictions, it would still be wasteful for orchestra managements to go elsewhere than to their own country for their membership. The native musician, moreover, is much less a contractual problem than the foreigner used to be. From now on, in the logic of events, we supply our own orchestral players, and their average is the highest in the world.

An Eye for Youth

Dr. Koussevitzky has seen this development take place in the course of his nineteen years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He availed himself of it long before the problem of unionism had become a pressing one. When he came here he found an orchestra principally of elderly men. He put American youth into the organization and gave its personnel the intensive drilling which has made the Boston Symphony the unrivaled symphonic body that it is today.

What the union has conceded in the new agreement has an importance which does not apply only to its arrangements with the Boston Symphony. If correctly reported, it means that henceforth an orchestra management will not be hampered in engaging a player from another city and another union local than the one in its neighborhood if it wants the man and does not consider the local incumbent adequate to its needs. In the past when such changes have been made they have only been accomplished after much manipulation and frequently unalterable opposition to the change on the part of union authorities. This means an eventual development of higher standards of performance within the union and the end of efforts to shield second or third-class players by putting the principle of holding jobs above that of artistic capacity.

Rehearsal Time

The matter of rehearsal time is now also capable of adjustment. The same number of rehearsals—"services"—and the same number of hours of work are retained under the new rulings, but if a conductor prefers to hold four rehearsals, say, of over three hours each, to five rehearsals of the two hours and a half as of previous regulation, he may do so. It is a distinct gain and a necessary preservation of rights on both sides. Let us hope that these and accessory circumstances of the unionization of the Boston Symphony will lead not only to better cooperation between orchestral managements and union heads, but also to a concentration upon artistic ends which will work for more and better orchestras in the years before us.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

NOV 30 1942

Music Notes

By MRS. GEORGE C. EICHHORN

Latest development in the Petrillo action to stop all recordings of music is the announcement that the president of the American Federation of Musicians will be called before an interstate commerce committee at an early date. The announcement of this development came from Senator D. Worth Clark, of Idaho, who said that the action would determine whether "this labor leader is bigger than the federal government."

"There hasn't been a new bit of popular music recorded since August 1, when Petrillo's prohibition against members of his union playing for records became effective," Senator Clark declared.

Before this hearing takes place, another event of considerable importance in the general condition of the case of union versus non-union has come about in the signing of the Boston Symphony orchestra with the union, which took place during the past week. For many years the Boston orchestra was the only major orchestra outside the union fold, and within the past several years the fact has caused many complications. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, could lead other orchestras, such as the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, only by special dispensation from the union head. Moreover, the orchestra, long recognized as one of the best in the world, indeed if not the best, was kept from broadcasting because it remained outside the union. Individual artists, union members from choice or otherwise, were told they could not appear as soloists with the great orchestra without being blacklisted.

Several weeks ago it was known that union officials and the management of the orchestra were dickering together. The chief bone of contention, apparently, was the fact that the Boston was holding out for the right for the hiring and firing of individual players for Dr. Koussevitzky.

In the decision to unite with the union, both sides made concessions. The union, for its part, went to unusual lengths to amend its by-laws so that the objections raised by the management of the Boston orchestra on this count would be overcome. Mr. Petrillo, who at first had maintained that this could be taken care of only by the annual convention of his union, later polled the locals by telegraph with the result that the proposal to amend the by-laws was upheld.

It is understood that the orchestra has been negotiating for some months with the Columbia Broadcasting system for a resumption of broadcasting, which it has not been able to do since August 13, 1940.

One of the most straight-forward discussions of the whole matter of Petrillo versus "canned music", which is at the bottom of the union dictator's dictum that no more music can be canned for radio or "juke-box" consumption, is to be found in the article by Bernard B. Smith entitled "What's Petrillo Up To?", which appears in the December issue of Harpers magazine.

Mr. Smith sets forth both sides of the argument as clearly and as fairly as any writer has done thus far. Moreover, he sets forth a suggestion as to the solution of the acknowledged problem of "live" music as against "canned" music. He proposed a three-member committee composed of one representative each from the American federation of labor, the broadcasting and recording companies, and the federal communications commission, to comprise a national foundation of music. This foundation would be charged with collection of funds from "juke-boxes" and from the broadcasting companies to be used for the payment of unemployed musicians.

Some idea of the immensity of the whole problem can be gained by the figures contained in Mr. Smith's proposal. Since, he says, a conservative estimate of the annual "take" of the "juke-boxes" is one hundred million dollars, it would be a simple matter to collect 20 per cent, or $20,000,000 from this source, and 20 per cent of the amount realized by broadcasting systems and radio stations from the use of recorded and transcribed music. The individual station would use part of its collections to maintain a larger group of instrumentalists than it now maintains. The remainder would be turned over to the foundation for the employment of professional musicians, now unemployed, for playing programs in parks, public buildings, schools, churches and for such public events as USO programs, army and navy relief, bond rallies, etc. The present demand for gratis services at these latter events is very heavy.

the jurisdiction of Petrillo and his union.

* * *

North Carolina's own Norman Cordon was the soloist who sang "The United Nations," Shostakovich's anthem for the union of democratic nations, at the Herald Tribune Forum on Current Problems. The new song by the Leningrad fire-fighting composer, whose works are now in top place in news value, was first sung at the Watergate in Washington on July 5. The words in the American version are by the American poet, Harold J. Prome, who was responsible for the lyrics for "Pine and Needles", "Sing Out the News", and other musical comedies and songs.

The music is modern in tone, difficult to sing, and is phrased in the slow pomp of anthems designed for public singing.

* * *

Another musician contained in the war news of current date is Pablo Casals, the great Spanish cellist, who was a loyalist and with the Spanish war, fled to France for refuge. He was recently returned to his native land as a political prison by the French government. Numerous leaders and lovers of music are joining in a plea to the government of the United States to request the Franco government to secure the release of the noted cellist. In one of the letters to the New York Times anent the matter, John Erskine, the noted novelist and amateur musician of note, wrote "We do not presume to advise Spain about her inner politics, but we believe the Spanish government should be informed as quickly as possible in what veneration this great artist is held. He cannot be a threat to his native land; he is today one of her chief glories. If any harm came to him something of Spanish civilization would be gone beyond recovery and the prospect of reconciliation and healing in the torn world would be dimmed."

The collection of 20 per cent of the "juke-box" money is based on the fact that the proceeds now realized are cut 50-50 by the owner of the boxes and innkeepers who house them. It has been pointed out that in many cases the funds realized by the innkeepers from the "juke-boxes," at absolutely no cost to them, has guaranteed the overhead of the tavern or restaurant. And from the playing of the records in the boxes, under the present set-up, not one penny goes to the players.

In the meantime, while no records for this type of public entertainment are being made in his country, the recording companies are said to be making records for such use in Mexico and Cuba, outside

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

DEC 3 - 1942

BOSTON MUSIC ROW IS ENDED

Symphony Orchestra Joins Petrillo Union.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, announced today the end of the long battle between the union and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the signing of a three-year agreement. Thus, the only major non-union orchestra in the United States at last came into the union ranks. Mr. Petrillo announced that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, had joined the union along with the 105 other members of the orchestra.

The agreement between the Boston Symphony and the A. F. of M., Mr. Petrillo said, was arrived at through a concession on the part of the Federation. Its by-laws were amended to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony orchestra jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada. The negotiations, which have been in progress for six months, were handled by Mr. Petrillo for the union; Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston Orchestra Association, and a committee of five members of the orchestra personnel.

Mr. Petrillo said that the trustees of the Boston Symphony had informed him at the outset that they would sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards, by submitting to a requirement which forced them to obtain permission from the union's local before a musician or conductor could be imported to Boston from other places.

"When I assured the management that I would change that law," Mr. Petrillo said, "they began to talk business."

Permits Union Soloists.

The signing of the agreement will permit the Boston Symphony to engage union members to appear with it as soloists; to play for the radio, and to make records—privileges enjoyed by all of other major symphony orchestras which have agreements with the union. Union rules have heretofore forbidden many distinguished instrumental and vocal soloists, members of the A. F. of M., to appear with the non-union Boston Symphony; and other agreements with record makers and radio chains have barred the orchestra from certain broadcasting and recording activities.

In his office at 1450 Broadway, the walls of which are decorated with reproductions of newspaper and magazine cartoons attacking Mr. Petrillo for his alleged attempt to rule all American musical activities, the union leader told reporters that the formal agreement between the Boston Symphony and Local 90 of his organization had been signed in Boston today.

"We are very happy to have the Boston Symphony in our Federation," he declared. "On both sides there was nothing but fairness and honesty in the negotiations. Whatever we agree to we live up to." Dr. Koussevitzky, long an opponent of the unionization of his orchestra, took no personal part in the negotiations, Mr. Petrillo said, but under the terms of the agreement, became a member of the union as soon as it was signed.

Asked about the Senatorial investigation of the union and of Mr. Petrillo's activities as its president, which was voted after widespread protests over the barring of various non-union, nonprofessional musicians from the air, and the restriction of phonograph record-making, Mr. Petrillo said that all he knew about it was what he had read in the papers.

"I'll be glad to appear," he said. "I'm perfectly willing and ready to be investigated. But the industries we deal with also should be investigated. The financial affairs of my organization are an open book."

TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

1942

Musicians Union Signs With Boston Symphony Orchestra

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

SYMPHONY NOW A UNION BAND

Three - Year Agreement With A. F. of M. Signed

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced last night that the signing of a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, was good for the union and good for the orchestra, which now ceases to be the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the country.

"As long as I remain head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you can be confident that the Boston Symphony will maintainn its standards," said Dr. Koussevitzky. He envisioned the same type of musicians and programmes for the future which has made the orchestra the highest ranking musical aggregation in the world. He interprets the change from a non-union to a union orchestra in accordance with the march of time and progress.

Dr. Koussevitzky automatically became a member of the union and holder of a union card in the ranks of labor.

Koussevitzky Says Symphony Standards Will Be Preserved

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchesera, said last night:

"I think it is good for the orchestra and good for the union. The people of Boston and all our audiences may be assured that the standards of the Boston Symphony can be preserved.

"We of the orchestra have to take part in the work of the union. The orchestra will help the union and the union will help the orchestra. One of the benefits of our joining is that when we need extra musicians we can engage them from the ranks of the local union. That we could not do before."

Said Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist and chairman of the committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Members' Association:

"My principal thought is that all of us are very happy that the negotiations have been carried through to a completely satisfactory conclusion for all parties concerned. Mr. Petrillo undertook to change the bylaws of the Federation from a viewpoint of high artistic principles, and the trustees of the orchestra were open-minded and easy to negotiate with.

"There will be benefits for all symphonic musicians in the country as well as for us of the Boston Symphony."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 3 - 1942

HUB SYMPHONY BOWS TO UNION

New York, Dec. 3—The Boston Symphony orchestra, the last remaining nonunion organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the symphony, including Dr Serge Koussevitsky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

Pointing out that all of the 60 symphonies of the United States and Canada were now members of the AFM, Petrillo said he had received authority at an emergency meeting of 18 locals to amend the union by-laws in conformity with the desires of the Boston symphony.

"The Boston symphony said to me, 'We engage a conductor and pay him well—in this instance Dr Koussevitzky. When he says to us as trustees that there is a good man in Chicago, Philadelphia or Pittsburg, I'd like to employ that man, the Boston local says we can't bring him in because there is a man in Boston who plays as well.' "

Petrillo said the trustees had informed him that unless they were able, by selecting the best musicians regardless of location, to keep up the "high standard" of the orchestra they would rather disband the organization than degrade that standard.

Petrillo said that until he had assured the Boston management that the by-law might be changed the negotiations had been deadlocked but thereafter they proceeded smoothly. He praised the "spirit of fairness" exhibited by Henry Cabot, a trustee. Also participating in the negotiations, he said, were five of the symphony's musicians elected by the other members.

"The big item that the AFM had to give way on," Petrillo said, "was the question of importing symphony players. For instance, a man playing in New York who wanted employment in Chicago couldn't go there unless he had the O.K. of that local board."

Other minor changes also were demanded by the symphony and granted, Petrillo said, but the major result was that all symphonic players now could work in any part of the country where their services might be desired.

Petrillo said that the recording privilege, however, could not be exercised until the AFM settled its current strike against radio and recording companies.

There had been no overtures from the radio chains, recording companies or juke box people, he said. Regarding a forthcoming Senate investigation of the union, Petrillo said the AFM affairs were "an open book," that it would be "only fair that the industry (radio) we're dealing with be investigated, but I don't think they want to be."

Music Union And Symphony Contract Told

Dec 1 month

The basis on which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the musicians' union have terminated their dispute of nearly a quarter of a century was reported today to be as follows:

The orchestra has agreed to go into the union on the condition of retaining control of its musical forces.

The union has agreed to this provision, though it means a marked change in union policy. Like various other unions, the musicians' organization frequently has sought to influence hirings and firings in the interest of its members.

The result will be to set up within the musicians' union a separate group composed of the 15 major symphony orchestras of the country, insofar as they are governed by bylaws especially applicable to their distinctive musical standards.

Quality of Music Protected

The quality of symphony music thus should be protected and symphony orchestras should benefit.

Obviously a compromise has been worked out. As it brings into the American Federation of Musicians the most important nonunion orchestra left in the United States, the union has gained a notable victory.

On the other hand, in obtaining an outstanding concession to musical standards of nation-wide import, the Boston orchestra has won an unusual success, while adapting itself to the trend of the times.

James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians, is credited with constructive leadership on the union side in working out the Boston impasse, which ran 22 years.

The revision of union practices will be effected by adoption of new union bylaws applying to symphony orchestras.

It is anticipated that for one thing Mr. Petrillo has consented to a limitation being placed on his own powers as President, which are now practically absolute, so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

DEC 3 - 1942

Hub Symphony Signs Contract with Petrillo

New York, Dec. 3.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitszky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

Pointing out that all of the 60 symphonies of the United States and Canada were now members of the AFM, Petrillo said he had received authority at an emergency meeting of 18 locals to amend the union by-laws in conformity with the desires of the Boston Symphony.

"The big item that the AFM had to give way on," Petrillo said, "was the question of importing symphony players. For instance, under the old rule, a man playing in New York who wanted employment in Chicago couldn't go there unless he had the O. K. of that local board.

"The Boston Symphony said to me, 'We engage a conductor and pay him well—in this instance Dr. Koussevitzky. When he says to us as trustees that there is a good man in Chicago, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, I'd like to employ that man, the Boston local says we can't bring him in because there is a man in Boston who plays as well.' "

Petrillo said the trustees had informed him that unless they were able, by selecting the best musicians regardless of location, to keep up the "high standard" of the orchestra they would rather disband the organization than degrade that standard.

Petrillo pointed out that one of the benefits to the symphony would be its return to the radio and recording studios from which it was barred by the union more than two years ago. Broadcasting and recording contracts would help the symphony meet its deficit of $180,000 for the past two years. The symphony also will be able to obtain world famous guest musicians whose services had been denied because of the non-union status.

Petrillo said that the recording privilege, however, could not be exercised until the AFM settled its current strike against radio and recording companies.

There had been no overtures from the radio chains, recording companies or juke box people, he said. Regarding a forthcoming Senate investigation of the union, Petrillo said the AFM affairs were "an open book," that it would be "only fair that the industry (radio) we're dealing with be investigated, but I don't think they want to be."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Joins AFM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement yesterday with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws on a point demanded by the Boston Symphony —permission to engage players from outside of Boston. All of the 105 members of the orchestra, including Dr. Serge Koussevisky, its world-famous conductor, became members of the union through the agreement.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs with Union

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, today became members of the American Federation of Musicians, James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, announced here.

A three-year agreement was signed in Boston after negotiations lasting six months, Mr. Petrillo said. The agreement covering the 105 members of the orchestra represented a concession by the union which amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

The agreement brought into the federation the only nonunion major symphony orchestra in the country.

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

DEC 1 - 1942

Jimmy Petrillo, union musicians' czar, has taken over the Boston Symphony while the Senate was threatening to investigate him. The Koussevitzky orchestra had depended on its big endowment provision against unions but Jimmy worked the trick by forbidding halls in different cities to house the orchestra on peril of being denied union music thereafter. As a sop Petrillo waives a ban and permits Koussevitzky to hire musicians outside his local zone. Thus the czar earns his $46,000 a year. But art takes a knockout.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

DEC 3 - 1942

BOSTON MUSIC ROW IS ENDED

Symphony Orchestra Joins Petrillo Union.

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, announced today the end of the long battle between the union and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the signing of a three-year agreement. Thus, the only major non-union orchestra in the United States at last came into the union ranks. Mr. Petrillo announced that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, had joined the union along with the 105 other members of the orchestra.

The agreement between the Boston Symphony and the A. F. of M., Mr. Petrillo said, was arrived at through a concession on the part of the Federation. Its by-laws were amended to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony orchestra jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada. The negotiations, which have been in progress for six months, were handled by Mr. Petrillo for the union; Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston Orchestra Association, and a committee of five members of the orchestra personnel.

Mr. Petrillo said that the trustees of the Boston Symphony had informed him at the outset that they would sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards, by submitting to a requirement which forced them to obtain permission from the union's local before a musician or conductor could be imported to Boston from other places.

"When I assured the management that I would change that law," Mr. Petrillo said, "they began to talk business."

Permits Union Soloists.

The signing of the agreement will permit the Boston Symphony to engage union members to appear with it as soloists; to play for the radio, and to make records—privileges enjoyed by all of other major symphony orchestras which have agreements with the union. Union rules have heretofore forbidden many distinguished instrumental and vocal soloists, members of the A. F. of M., to appear with the non-union Boston Symphony; and other agreements with record makers and radio chains have barred the orchestra from certain broadcasting and recording activities.

In his office at 1450 Broadway, the walls of which are decorated with reproductions of newspaper and magazine cartoons attacking Mr. Petrillo for his alleged attempt to rule all American musical activities, the union leader told reporters that the formal agreement between the Boston Symphony and Local 90 of his organization had been signed in Boston today.

"We are very happy to have the Boston Symphony in our Federation," he declared. "On both sides there was nothing but fairness and honesty in the negotiations. Whatever we agree to we live up to." Dr. Koussevitzky, long an opponent of the unionization of his orchestra, took no personal part in the negotiations, Mr. Petrillo said, but under the terms of the agreement, became a member of the union as soon as it was signed.

Asked about the Senatorial investigation of the union and of Mr. Petrillo's activities as its president, which was voted after widespread protests over the barring of various non-union, non-professional musicians from the air, and the restriction of phonograph record-making, Mr. Petrillo said that all he knew about it was what he had read in the papers.

"I'll be glad to appear," he said. "I'm perfectly willing and ready to be investigated. But the industries we deal with also should be investigated. The financial affairs of my organization are an open book."

TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

1-1942

Musicians Union Signs With Boston Symphony Orchestra

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

SYMPHONY NOW A UNION BAND

Three - Year Agreement With A. F. of M. Signed

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced last night that the signing of a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, was good for the union and good for the orchestra, which now ceases to be the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the country.

"As long as I remain head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you can be confident that the Boston Symphony will maintainn its standards," said Dr. Koussevitzky. He envisioned the same type of musicians and programmes for the future which has made the orchestra the highest ranking musical aggregation in the world. He interprets the change from a non-union to a union orchestra in accordance with the march of time and progress.

Dr. Koussevitzky automatically became a member of the union and holder of a union card in the ranks of labor.

Koussevitzky Says Symphony Standards Will Be Preserved

Dec 4

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchesera, said last night:

"I think it is good for the orchestra and good for the union. The people of Boston and all our audiences may be assured that the standards of the Boston Symphony can be preserved.

"We of the orchestra have to take part in the work of the union. The orchestra will help the union and the union will help the orchestra. One of the benefits of our joining is that when we need extra musicians we can engage them from the ranks of the local union. That we could not do before."

Said Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist and chairman of the committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Members' Association:

"My principal thought is that all of us are very happy that the negotiations have been carried through to a completely satisfactory conclusion for all parties concerned. Mr. Petrillo undertook to change the bylaws of the Federation from a viewpoint of high artistic principles, and the trustees of the orchestra were open-minded and easy to negotiate with.

"There will be benefits for all symphonic musicians in the country as well as for us of the Boston Symphony."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 3 - 1942

HUB SYMPHONY BOWS TO UNION

New York, Dec. 3—The Boston Symphony orchestra, the last remaining nonunion organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the symphony, including Dr Serge Koussevitsky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

Pointing out that all of the 60 symphonies of the United States and Canada were now members of the AFM, Petrillo said he had received authority at an emergency meeting of 18 locals to amend the union by-laws in conformity with the desires of the Boston symphony.

"The Boston symphony said to me, 'We engage a conductor and pay him well—in this instance Dr Koussevitzky. When he says to us as trustees that there is a good man in Chicago, Philadelphia or Pittsburg, I'd like to employ that man, the Boston local says we can't bring him in because there is a man in Boston who plays as well.'"

Petrillo said the trustees had informed him that unless they were able, by selecting the best musicians regardless of location, to keep up the "high standard" of the orchestra they would rather disband the organization than degrade that standard.

Petrillo said that until he had assured the Boston management that the by-law might be changed the negotiations had been deadlocked but thereafter they proceeded smoothly. He praised the "spirit of fairness" exhibited by Henry Cabot, a trustee. Also participating in the negotiations, he said, were five of the symphony's musicians elected by the other members.

"The big item that the AFM had to give way on," Petrillo said, "was the question of importing symphony players. For instance, a man playing in New York who wanted employment in Chicago couldn't go there unless he had the O.K. of that local board."

Other minor changes also were demanded by the symphony and granted, Petrillo said, but the major result was that all symphonic players now could work in any part of the country where their services might be desired.

Petrillo said that the recording privilege, however, could not be exercised until the AFM settled its current strike against radio and recording companies.

There had been no overtures from the radio chains, recording companies or juke box people, he said. Regarding a forthcoming Senate investigation of the union, Petrillo said the AFM affairs were "an open book," that it would be "only fair that the industry (radio) we're dealing with be investigated, but I don't think they want to be."

Music Union And Symphony Contract Told

Dec 1 Monday

The basis on which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the musicians' union have terminated their dispute of nearly a quarter of a century was reported today to be as follows:

The orchestra has agreed to go into the union on the condition of retaining control of its musical forces.

The union has agreed to this provision, though it means a marked change in union policy. Like various other unions, the musicians' organization frequently has sought to influence hirings and firings in the interest of its members.

The result will be to set up within the musicians' union a separate group composed of the 15 major symphony orchestras of the country, insofar as they are governed by bylaws especially applicable to their distinctive musical standards.

Quality of Music Protected

The quality of symphony music thus should be protected and symphony orchestras should benefit.

Obviously a compromise has been worked out. As it brings into the American Federation of Musicians the most important nonunion orchestra left in the United States, the union has gained a notable victory.

On the other hand, in obtaining an outstanding concession to musical standards of nation-wide import, the Boston orchestra has won an unusual success, while adapting itself to the trend of the times.

James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians, is credited with constructive leadership on the union side in working out the Boston impasse, which ran 22 years.

The revision of union practices will be effected by adoption of new union bylaws applying to symphony orchestras.

It is anticipated [illegible]

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

DEC 3 - 1942

Hub Symphony Signs Contract with Petrillo

New York, Dec. 3.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitszky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

Pointing out that all of the 60 symphonies of the United States and Canada were now members of the AFM, Petrillo said he had received authority at an emergency meeting of 18 locals to amend the union by-laws in conformity with the desires of the Boston Symphony.

"The big item that the AFM had to give way on," Petrillo said, "was the question of importing symphony players. For instance, under the old rule, a man playing in New York who wanted employment in Chicago couldn't go there unless he had the O. K. of that local board.

"The Boston Symphony said to me, 'We engage a conductor and pay him well—in this instance Dr. Koussevitzky. When he says to us as trustees that there is a good man in Chicago, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, I'd like to employ that man, the Boston local says we can't bring him in because there is a man in Boston who plays as well.'"

Petrillo said the trustees had informed him that unless they were able, by selecting the best musicians regardless of location, to keep up the "high standard" of the orchestra they would rather disband the organization than degrade that standard.

Petrillo pointed out that one of the benefits to the symphony would be its return to the radio and recording studios from which it was barred by the union more than two years ago. Broadcasting and recording contracts would help the symphony meet its deficit of $180,000 for the past two years. The symphony also will be able to obtain world famous guest musicians whose services had been denied because of the non-union status.

Petrillo said that the recording privilege, however, could not be exercised until the AFM settled its current strike against radio and recording companies.

There had been no overtures from the radio chains, recording companies or juke box people, he said. Regarding a forthcoming Senate investigation of the union, Petrillo said the AFM affairs were "an open book," that it would be "only fair that the industry (radio) we're dealing with be investigated, but I don't think they want to be."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Joins AFM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement yesterday with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws on a point demanded by the Boston Symphony—permission to engage players from outside of Boston. All of the 105 members of the orchestra, including Dr. Serge Koussevisky, its world-famous conductor, became members of the union through the agreement.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs with Union

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, today became members of the American Federation of Musicians, James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, announced here.

A three-year agreement was signed in Boston after negotiations lasting six months, Mr. Petrillo said. The agreement covering the 105 members of the orchestra represented a concession by the union which amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

The agreement brought into the federation the only nonunion major symphony orchestra in the country.

MENE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has had to put on the Petrillo yoke and become unionized; but it won from the boss the right to hire musicians wherever found, a wonderful concession. At any rate, the public may be glad of one thing; it will now be possible to hear this first orchestra of the Country on the air from which it has been debarred. In short it has won one "freedom" by giving up another.

[124]

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
LEADER AND PRESS

GRAND FORKS, N. D.
EVENING HERALD

ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN

OAKLAND, CALIF.
POST-INQUIRER

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DENVER, COLO.
ROCKY MT. NEWS

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

DEC 4 1942

PETRILLO SIGNS LAST SYMPHONY IN AFL UNION

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEW SENTINEL

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

DODGE CITY, KAN.
GLOBE

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR-JOURNAL

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.
OUTLOOK

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Agreement With Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union; Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR

CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

FARGO, N. D.
EVENING FORUM

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Agreement With Union

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP.)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
LEADER AND PRESS

GRAND FORKS, N. D.
EVENING HERALD

ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

TULSA, OKLA.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEW SENTINEL

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR

CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

For Larger Catalog

NO APPOINTMENT NEEDED

Extractions Asleep or Awake
Prices You Can Afford to Pay
DENTAL PLATES FINISHED IN ONE DAY
DAILY 9-8 • SUN. 10-2

Petrillo Signs Up Boston Symphony

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months.

Signs Up Symphony

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of musician, AFL, announced today the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into Federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement covering the 105 members of the orchestra represented a concession by the Federation because the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Boston Symphony Signs With Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 4—(I. N. S.).—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to become unionized today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians. Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
LEADER AND PRESS

GRAND FORKS, N. D.
EVENING HERALD

ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR-TIMES

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

SEATTLE, WASH.

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR

CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER

WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING

LOUNGE CHAIR with Steel Springs
$10.98
IN ONE DAY
DAILY 9-8 • SUN. 10-2
NO APPOINTMENT NEEDED
for Perfect Cocktails

Speed vs. Power In Regis-A

Speed versus power—

DiMaggio refused to discuss wife's action.

"It's my business where she and what she's doing," he declar

The star New York Yankee o fielder and Miss Arnold, a form

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, announced yesterday the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Boston Symphony Comes Here Feb. 9

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play in the Auditorium for the Community Concerts Feb. 9. This date was reserved weeks ago, but because auditorium dates for 1943 are not confirmed until the first of the year, there is always a possibility of a change, but it is believed that the date will stand and the orchestra will be here Feb. 9.

Now that the Boston players are joining the musicians' union, any fear that they might not be able to play here has vanished. The orchestra was, by all odds, the favorite in the Community Concert patrons' poll and officials are delighted that the request of the patrons can be satisfied.

Joins Federation

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
LEADER-PRESS

Speed vs. In Regis-A

Speed versus power

DIMaggio refused to discuss wife's action.

"It's my business where she and what she's doing," he declar

The star New York Yankee o fielder and Miss Arnold, a form

Boston Symph In Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (INS).—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston symphony orchestra — to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the arrangement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Methodist Church, a fair temporarily had to dim its bright lights.

Boy Scouts, equipped with official arm bands, were noticeable as early as 7 p. m., but their ardor cooled in the face of the biting wind and they took cover until officially ordered out.

At the Springfield report center Chief Air Raid Warden William P. Forrest said the operation of the nerve system of civilian defense was carried out with speed and efficiency

By Associated Press

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—James C. Petriollo, president of American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brining into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

For Expert Cocktails

height on the left bank of the Don river west of that city in a hand-to-hand fight, and smashed another hole in the enemy's lines west of Rzhev on the snow-choked central front, the Soviets announced early today.

In Summer Uniforms

More than 3,100 Germans fell during yesterday's widespread and

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS UNION ACCORD

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston Symphony. All of the 105 members of the symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

Speed vs. In Regis-A

Speed versus power—

"It's my business 'where she and what she's doing,' he declar The star New York Yankee o fielder and Miss Arnold, a form

Boston Symphony

NEW YORK, Dec. (A.P.)— James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

orchestra.

faith and loyalty; I demonstrative. I couldn't be. But with him I was. I lost myself in loving him. That was almost the most wonderful part of it—forgetting myself for someone else."
Paula said, "Maybe I won't move and maybe these crazy pictures aren't making faces at me. Maybe I'll go out and get a new beau or maybe I'll just have you to dinner Forrest said the operation of the nerve system of civilian defense was carried out with speed and efficiency

Boston Orchestra Brought Into Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

In Summer Uniforms

More than 3,100 Germans fell during yesterday's widespread and today.

New York—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

CLEVELAND, OHIO

Speed vs. Power In Regis-A

Speed versus power—

"It's my business where she and what she's doing," he declar The star New York Yankee o fielder and Miss Arnold, a form

BOSTON SYMPHON
By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, December 3.—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, announced today the signing of a three-year agreement wi the Boston Symphony Orchestra bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

though he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

17 French river.
24 She ——s in motion pictures.
25 Morass.
28 Drug.
29 Native of Lapland.
30 Headdress.
31 Genus of

I'll go out and get a new beau or maybe, I'll just have you to dinner, said Warden William P. Forrest said the operation of the nerve system of civilian defense was carried out with speed and efficiency

Boston Orchestra Signs Contract With Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 13 (U.P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the America Federation of Musicians (AFL) after six months of negotiations.

DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL

NEW YORK, N.Y.

In Summer Uniforms

More than 3,100 Germans fell during yesterday's widespread and

for Perfect Cocktails

president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

Speed vs. In Regis-A

Speed versus power—

"It's my business where she and what she's doing," he declar The star New York Yankee o fielder and Miss Arnold, a form usable and Spitfires sun-ny the airfields I have traveled wi

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra — to become unionized, was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians Friday.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

with ration stamp 33c

Boston Symphony Signs Up With AFL Union

NEW YORK (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Boston Symphony and Union Sign Contract

New York, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

Speed vs. In Regis-A

Speed versus power

"It's my business where she and what she's doing," he declar The star New York Yankee o fielder and Miss Arnold, a form

Boston Symphony and Union Sign Contract

New York, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Boston Symphony in Musicians Union

NEW YORK —(AP)— James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

In Summer Uniforms

More than 3,100 Germans fell during yesterday's widespread and

Joins Petrillo Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 — (AP) — James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Petrillo Union Signs Up Symphony Orchestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Petrillo Signs Big Orchestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. —((AP)) — James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Music, AFL today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said that Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the symphony, did not enter personaly into the negotiations, but under terms of the agreement Dr. Koussevitsky became a member of the union immediately.

Boston Symphony Pact With A. F. of L.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (INS).—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra — to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Boston Symphony Joins Petrillo Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(I. N. S.)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country — the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Boston Symphony Signs With Union

James C. Petrillo, president of the America Federation of Musicians, AFL, announced today the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said that Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the symphony, did not enter personaly into the negotiations, but under terms of the agreement Dr. Koussevitsky became a member of the union immediately.

Aided by Czaras

Wilmington Entry Deals Mosconi First Defeat; Ponzi Adds Two Wins

In Summer Uniforms

More than 3,100 Germans fell

Announced by Petrillo

New York, Dec. 3—(AP): James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Delicious—Tasteful
Glad to Mail Gifts
Brandied Fruit Cakes and P
Greeting Boxes, Appetizer Bo
Mignon Chocolates.

Vt. Maid Syrup ...bot. 23c
Jones Self Rising Buckwheat 15c
F. W. Shortening . 69c
Burnett's Vanilla, 2-oz. 43c
meeting payments, investments in sound issues are at head of preferred list. Know that you can succeed as you try.
DEC 22 TO JAN 21 (Capri

Bring LITTLE totaling 22 points (two 5-point stamps, a 5-point stamp and a 1-point stamp).
17 French river.
24 She ——s in motion pictures.
25 Morass.
28 Drug.
29 Native of Lapland.
30 Headdress.

Speed vs. A
In Regis-A
Speed versus power—
"It's my business where she and what she's doing," he declar
The star New York Yankee ou fielder and Miss Arnold, a form

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Boston Symphony Signs With Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the Federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the Federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Boston Symphony Signs With Union

NEW YORK — (AP) — James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston symphony orchestra, bringing into the Federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Orchestra in Petrillo Fold

James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, announced yesterday the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, thus bringing into the union fold the only major non-union orchestra in the country.

Petrillo said the contract covers 105 members and contains a concession by the union, amending its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another here and in Canada.

He said Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston orchestra, did not enter into the negotiations, but under the terms of the agreement becomes a member of the union immediately.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

NEW YORK—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

tion to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

NEW YORK,
Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Labor, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Boston Symphony Members Enter Union

New York, N. Y. – (U.P.) – The 105 members of the Boston symphony orchestra, including Sergei Koussevitzky, director, became members of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) Thursday with the signing of a contract between the orchestra management and the AFM.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

"Provided, that the term 'bona fide Santa Claus' shall be construed to include only such per-and stage work.

Despite her would-be mama-in-law's announcements, Janet Blair says she will not marry Private Lou Bush until the war ends... Kate Smith joins the list of stage, radio and screen stars who will highlight the movie, "This Is the Army."

*Penny Singleton advised Columbia bosses, screaming for her return to the "Blondie" series, that she'll stay in Quantico, Va., with her Marine officer-husband until she's shed excess pounds gained after the birth of her baby. Alice annual gifts were made of food and fruit for the needy persons

Enters Petrillo Union

The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to become unionized, was signed up today with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Boston Signs With Petrillo

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians of the American Federation of Labor, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Record in Webster

WEBSTER, Dec. 3 (AP)—Webster, on Dec. 10, would have marked an even four years without a death resulting from an automobile accident, but today that record was broken. Clarence Ormsby, 70 of Webster

Greeting Boxes, Appetizer Bo
Mignon Chocolates.

Vt. Maid Syrup ...bot. 23c
Jones Self Rising Buckwheat 15c

F. W. Shortening . 69c
Burnett's Vanilla, 2-oz. 43c

meeting payments, investments in sound issues are at head of preferred list. Know that you can succeed as you try.

New York, Dec. 4 — The last of the principal musical organizations in the country — the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union. the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Greeting Boxes, Appetizer Bo
Mignon Chocolates.
Vt. Maid Syrup ...bot. 23c
Jones Self Rising Buckwheat 16c
F. W. Shortening . 69c
Burnett's Vanilla, 2-oz. 43c meeting payments, investments in sound issues are at head of preferred list. Know that you can succeed as you try.
DEC 22 TO JAN 21 (Capri

Symphony Unionized

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra — to become unionized, Friday was signed with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Members In Union

NEW YORK—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

"Pro fide struc

and stage work.

Despite her would-be mama-in-law's announcements, Janet Blair says she will not marry Private Lou Bush until the war ends. . . Kate Smith joins the list of stage, radio and screen stars who will highlight the movie, "This Is the Army."

Penny Singleton advised Columbia bosses, screaming for her return to the "Blondie" series ton Symphony Orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, which ~~was made~~ public Nov. 26, will run for three years, it was announced yesterday by James C. Petrillo, the union's president. The 105 members of the orchestra and their leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, have all joined the union, he said. It had been the only major non-union orchestra in the country.

Symphony for joining the ... ~~union to another within the~~ ...mbe... States and Canada. ...de by ... of the

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

With Symphony Group

New York, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Members In Union

NEW YORK—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Hub Symphony Ends AFM Row, Signs

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston Symphony for joining the union.

States and Canada.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

WINS BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Petrillo Signs With Last Major Non-Union Symphony

NEW YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada. Negotiations lasted six months.

Members In Union

NEW YORK—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Signs With Petrillo

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Muiscians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

tion to another within the United States and Canada.

Soldier as A

out came when it was disclosed that many of the 138 still hospitalized were suffering lung ailments.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

With Musicians Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the Federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the Federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Members In Union

NEW YORK—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

PETRILLO SIGN

NEW YORK, N. Y. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, (A. F. of L.), Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston, Mass., symphony orchestra.

This brought into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the nation.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Newhalls, Yanks Play Marathon

Backs—Jack Jenkins, [illegible] Alvin Dark, L. S. U., Bobby [illegible] Tennessee, and Lou Thomas [illegible] lane.

Other players receiving one or more votes for the first team were: End—Sam Sharp, Alabama. Tackles—Denver Crawford, Tennessee; Holley Heard, L. S. U., and Mitchell Olenski, Alabama. Guards—Vic Costellos, Auburn, and Tony Leon, Alabama. Center—Charlie Hoover, Vanderbilt. Backs—Russ Craft, Alabama; Jim Reynolds, Auburn; Walter Slater, Tennessee.

Tech:

JAMES C. PETRILLO, president of the American Federation of Musicians, announced in New York yesterday the signing of a three-year unionization agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, which amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada. Negotiations, lasting six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

* * *

Members In Union

NEW YORK—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

LISTER
...ted Workmen
...site . . . Like New!
...gain price.

PETRILLO SIGN

NEW YORK, N. Y. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, (A. F. of L.), Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston, Mass., symphony orchestra.

This brought into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the nation.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

Dec. 13

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Taken Into Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrolli said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Members In Union

NEW YORK—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

PETRILLO SIGN

NEW YORK, N. Y. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, (A. F. of L.), Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston, Mass., symphony orchestra.

This brought into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the nation.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Union, Petrillo Says

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Members In Union

NEW YORK—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

PETRILLO SIGN

NEW YORK, N. Y. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, (A. F. of L.), Thursday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston, Mass., symphony orchestra.

This brought into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the nation.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Symphony Joins Union

Signs Three-Year Contract with AFM

The Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday signed a three-year agreement with the American Federation of Musicians which took the 105 Symphony players and their conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, into the American Federation of Labor as members.

The agreement with the Boston Symphony, last of the major orchestras in the United States to become unionized, was signed in Boston but formally announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, in New York last night.

Petrillo disclosed that the Boston Symphony agreed to sign only after the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This will permit the Symphony to import musicians or conductors from other places to Boston without obtaining permission from the union's local. Petrillo said the Symphony trustees had told him at the outset of negotiations that they had sooner break up the orchestra than lower its standards by submitting to such a requirement.

The negotiations, which lasted six months, were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, Boston Symphony trustee, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

The Petrillo Appeal

The importance of the case well justifies Federal District Judge Barnes of Chicago in granting the government permission to carry his decision in the Petrillo case to the United States Supreme Court. Several questions involved deserve further consideration. The labor position is that, although relatively few musicians are engaged in the making of records and transcriptions for recording companies and radio stations, many are thereby deprived of employment. The union declared in an advertisement that "justice demands that the musician should not be compelled to make 'canned music' for commercial industries which grow rich—while he walks the streets without a job."

There are, however, great public interests to be conserved. May a union use its power to compel an employer to maintain obsolete and inefficient methods and to abandon progressive mechanical improvements in order to force the hiring of unneeded labor? What of the small industries which depend on juke boxes, instead of orchestras, for the entertainment of their patrons, and what of the concerns that manufacture records and transcriptions? Shall a labor union be permitted to enforce the "right" to bar from the air such voluntary non-commercial performances as those of high school orchestras? In presenting these and other matters the government has said that "there is no decision of the Supreme Court which directly deals with these questions."

Judge Barnes ruled last October against the Department of Justice, seeing the case as a dispute between two labor unions, the musicians and the makers of mechanical devices, which did not come within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Elmer Davis holds that such a ban may end the existence of many small radio stations and hamper his work as director of OWI, and the chairman of FCC has demanded legislative action to end Petrillo's control. Congress will probably wait for the court decision.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 5 - 1942

Sensible Compromise

The agreement reached between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians' Union is an example of the sort of compromise that can be worked out when both sides earnestly desire a settlement. It will bring widespread satisfaction to the musical public and particularly to Rochester, where the settlement will mean return of the famous orchestra for a concert, probably this month, in the Eastman Theater. The concert was omitted from the regular season series this year, owing to the fear of union reprisals if the non-union orchestra were to appear here.

By the agreement, the orchestra retains control over personnel, including "hirings and firings." Not only that but similar rights will be accorded fifteen other major symphony orchestras of the country, which are thus placed in a special group within the national union. James C. Petrillo, president of the union, is said to have consented to a limitation on his own powers as president so as to guarantee no interference with the new plan. The effect, presumably, will be to give these leading orchestras full authority to pick their own players, to discharge members and replace them with others, and to use their own judgment in keeping performances up to standard.

So long as the new arrangement safeguards the rights of the players in respect to pay and working conditions, it ought to leave everybody satisfied. It represents concession on both sides. And finally it protects the public, whose interest is solely to hear the best music performed with the best possible technical excellence. Where there is a real will for compromise there is usually a way.

Petrillo Happy at Signing Boston Symphony to Contract

Will Do Everything Possible to Benefit Orchestra, He Says

Dec 4

NEW YORK, Dec. 3—James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians and guardian of matters musical, today announced a three-year union agreement with the Boston Symphony had been signed, bringing into the Federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States. There were, he said, 60 symphony orchestras in the country, "and all union, now that Boston is in."

Obviously in good humor, the union leader said that the agreement "will permit the Boston Symphony to make records—when the record dispute is over—go on the radio and do the things that other orchestras are able to do as members of the Federation.". Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Syhphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony. He stopped all other union orchestras, symphony and popular, from making records last Aug. 1 in a move to create more employment of live musicians.

Made Some Concessions

Of the Boston Symphony, he said: "A very happy situation—a great orchestra—a great conductor. Anything we can do for the benefit of this orchestra we will do. The contract went into effect as of today, he explained, when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and his 105 musicians, became members of the Federation's Boston local, No. 9.

Mr. Petrillo said the Federation made some concessions to enroll the Boston Symphony. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions being imposed by the local boards. The Boston Symphony had demanded that it be allowed to go outside the Boston area for men it wanted. Hiring of foreign musicians was worked out individually.

Eighteen locals, Mr. Petrillo said, agreed that he use his emergency powers to change the by-laws in this respect. 'Personally," he said, "I think it is a very good law."

Negotiations, which lasted six months, were handled by Mr. Petrillo for the Federation, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston Orchestral Association, and a committee of five men from the orchestra itself. Mr. Petrillo said the details of the symphony's membership in Boston local was something between the local and the orchestra and that an agreement was signed in Boston today.

The record situation was all that clouded the Petrillo brow today. Asked if there were anything new on this story, he said that since the case was in the courts, and he expected a Senate investigation of the record ban Jan. 1, he felt there was nothing to say except that the "Federation is an open book" and that "if there is to be an investigation, I think it's only fair that the industry we're dealing with should also be investigated. I think some of them don't want to be."

During the last four months the union leader has been collecting cartoons lambasting him for his stand on the recording ban. Forty-one of these cartoons are framed and on the walls of his office. They were, he said, instigated by "Mr. National Association of Broadcasters."

He and his lieutenants appeared to enjoy the cartoons immensely. "If Mr. National Association of Broadcasters would throw that money they spent on this stuff in trying to give musicians more work we would soon come to a settlement." One of the captions showed Petrillo fiddling "while Thurman Arnold burns."

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs With Petrillo

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiate Six Months

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

Petrillo said Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the symphony, did not enter personally into the negotiations, but that under the terms of the agreement he became a member of the union immediately. He said the agreement between the Boston Symphony and Local 90, A. F. of M., was signed today in Boston.

Took Stand at Outset

Petrillo said the trustees of the Boston Symphony had informed him at the outset that they had sooner break up the orchestra than to lower its standards by submitting to a requirement which forced them to obtain permission from the union's local before a musician or conductor could be imported to Boston from other places.

"When I assured the management that I would change that law," Petrillo said, "they began to talk business."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Petrillo Sign 3-Year Union Agreement

James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians and guardian of matters musical, called reporters to his office at 1450 Broadway yesterday to talk about the unionization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, preliminary details of which were reported on Nov. 26.

Mr. Petrillo said a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony had been signed, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. There were, he said, sixty symphony orchestras in the country "and all union now that Boston is in."

Obviously in good humor, the union leader said that the agreement "will permit the Boston Symphony to make records—when the record dispute is over—go on the radio and do the things that other orchestras are able to do that are members of the federation."

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony. He stopped all other union orchestras, symphony and popular, from making records last Aug. 1 in a move to create more employment of live musicians.

The record situation was all that clouded the Petrillo brow yesterday. Asked if there were anything new on this story he said that since the case was in the courts and he expected a Senate investigation of the record ban Jan. 1, he felt there was nothing to say except that the "federation is an open book" and that "if there is to be an investigation I think it's only fair that the industry we're dealing with should also be investigated. I think some of them don't want to be."

During the last four months the union leader has been collecting cartoons lambasting him for his stand on the recording ban. Forty-one of these cartoons from newspapers and magazines are framed and are on the walls of his office. They were, he said, instigated by "Mr. National Association of Broadcasters."

He and his lieutenants appeared to enjoy the cartoons immensely. "If Mr. National Association of Broadcasters would throw that money they spend on this stuff in trying to give musicians more work we would soon come to a settlement," he said. One depicted Mr. Petrillo fiddling "while Thurman Arnold burns."

Then getting back to the Boston Symphony he said: "A very happy situation—a great orchestra—a great conductor. Anything we can do for the benefit of this orchestra we will do."

The contract went into effect as of yesterday, he explained, when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and his 105 musicians became members of the federation's Boston local, No. 9.

Mr. Petrillo said the federation made some concessions to enroll the Boston Symphony. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions being imposed by the local boards. The Boston Symphony had demanded that it be allowed to go outside the Boston area for men it wanted in order to maintain its high standard. Hiring of foreign musicians is given individual consideration in the federation.

Eghteen locals, Mr. Petrillo said, agreed that he use his emergency powers to change the by-laws in this respect. "Personally," he said, of the change, "I think it is a very good law."

Negotiations, which lasted six months, were handled by Mr. Petrillo for the federation, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston Orchestral Association, and a committee of five men from the orchestra itself. Mr. Petrillo said the details of the symphony's membership in the Boston local was something between the local and the orchestra and that an agreement between the two parties was signed in Boston yesterday.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

DEC 5 1942

CONFIRM DEAL BY SYMPHONY AND PETRILLO

Boston, Dec. 5.—(AP)—Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra confirmed today the announcement by James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo announced in New York that the union and the orchestra, the only nonunion group among major symphonies in the nation, had signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

The trustees' statement said, in part:

"The most important change in the bylaws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

The statement said that a clause of the contract between the trustees and the local union "provides that the desires of a majority of the members of the orchestra shall determine any demand on the part of the union respecting their working conditions."

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNED

New York, Dec. 6.—(UP)—The Blue Network announced today that it had signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, Dec. 26. The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the Musicians' Union.

[126]

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

DEC 4 1942

Petrillo, Boston Symphony Sign Union Contract

A.F.M. Revises Its By-Laws to End Six-Month Dispute

New York, Dec. 3.—(UP)—The 105 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, its famous maestro, became members of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F. of L.) today with the signing of a contract between the orchestra management and the A.F.M.

James C. Petrillo, president of A.F.M., announced that the contract was signed after his organization had amended its bylaws on a point demanded by the Boston Symphony regarding importation of talent.

Petrillo said every one of the 60 symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada is now a member of his organization. The authority to change the bylaws in conformity with the request of the Boston organization was given to Petrillo at an extraordinary meeting of the 18 locals of A.F.M.

"The big item that the A.F.M. had to give way on," Petrillo said, "was the question of importing symphony players. For instance, a man playing in New York who wanted employment in Chicago could not go there unless he had the approval of that local board.

"The Boston Symphony said to me, 'We engage a conductor and pay him well—in this instance, Dr. Koussevitzky. When he says to us as trustees that there is a good man in Chicago, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, I'd like to employ that man, but the Boston local says we can't bring him in because there is a man in Boston who plays as well.'"

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

DEC 6 - 1942

Boston Symphony Joins Up

Inasmuch as the Boston Symphony orchestra has joined the union, the issue over the rental of the Springfield Auditorium for a Boston Symphony concert fades away. The city property committee's attitude, however, was perfectly sound; the hall could be blacklisted by Mr Petrillo but it would not be denied to a nonunion orchestra. The hall is owned by the city and is operated by the city for the people, not for the benefit of any class, sect, party or group.

The "unionized Symphony," as the Boston Herald refers to it, came through rather well, after all. Mr Petrillo yielded some ground and his concession, which required a change in the by-laws of his Federation of Musicians, permits the Boston Symphony to engage musicians from any part of the world. Conductor Koussevitsky thus defended successfully, in the interests of art in the best sense, his right to seek and engage artists of superior merit wherever they could be found.

The union rule that musicians must be hired from a local area was wisely modified by the union leaders. For, aside from the best possible development of music and the taste of the public, the concession should prove conciliatory in its effect on public sentiment. Other high class symphony orchestras should be beneficiaries of this union concession.

The nonunion Beacon street view of the settlement, as voiced by the Herald, is one of resignation mixed with relief—relief because the beloved Symphony will not go under, and the treasury deficits will be more manageable. The screws which Mr Petrillo had been steadily and ruthlessly turning had plainly brought the situation to a crisis with no end to the increasing deficits in sight. As the Herald states the case:—

> Many outstanding Bostonians, to whom unionism may be repugnant, have felt for a long time that unionization in this instance was inevitable. The nonunionized Boston Symphony orchestra has done no broadcasting and made no records for two years, and the revenue thereby cut off has been large. Petrillo enforced his ban by threats of strikes of his federated musicians against broadcasting stations or recording companies which used Boston Symphony music. He blacklisted halls where nonunion orchestras appeared. He forbade instrumental soloists to participate in concerts of non-union organizations. At times he prevented the Symphony from utilizing famous guest conductors.

That the late Col Higginson, the founder of the Boston Symphony and its chief support for many years, would "turn in his grave" over this development if he could know about it, must be a matter of opinion. In view of the fact that the quality of the music is to be maintained at the highest pre-union standards, our guess is that the colonel would accept the compromise.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Petrillo Sign 3-Year Union Agreement

James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians and guardian of matters musical, called reporters to his office at 1450 Broadway Thursday to talk about the unionization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, preliminary details of which were reported on Nov. 26.

Mr. Petrillo said a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony had been signed, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. There were, he said, sixty symphony orchestras in the country "and all union now that Boston is in."

Obviously in good humor, the union leader said that the agreement "will permit the Boston Symphony to make records—when the record dispute is over—go on the radio and do the things that other orchestras are able to do that are members of the federation."

Mr. Petrillo had the Boston Symphony barred from radio and recording fields on Aug. 13, 1940, by threatening to pull out all union players from any groups that did business with the Boston Symphony. He stopped all other union orchestras, symphony and popular, from making records last Aug. 1 in a move to create more employment of live musicians.

The record situation was all that clouded the Petrillo brow Thursday. Asked if there were anything new on this story he said that since the case was in the courts and he expected a Senate investigation of the record ban Jan. 1, he felt there was nothing to say except that the "federation is an open book" and that "if there is to be an investigation I think it's only fair that the industry we're dealing with should also be investigated. I think some of them don't want to be."

During the last four months the union leader has been collecting cartoons lambasting him for his stand on the recording ban. Forty-one of these cartoons from newspapers and magazines are framed and are on the walls of his office. They were, he said, instigated by "Mr. National Association of Broadcasters."

He and his lieutenants appeared to enjoy the cartoons immensely. "If Mr. National Association of Broadcasters would throw that money they spend on this stuff in trying to give musicians more work we would soon come to a settlement," he said. One depicted Mr. Petrillo fiddling "while Thurman Arnold burns."

Then getting back to the Boston Symphony he said: "A very happy situation—a great orchestra—a great conductor. Anything we can do for the benefit of this orchestra we will do."

The contract went into effect as of Thursday, he explained, when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and his 105 musicians became members of the federation's Boston local, No. 9.

Mr. Petrillo said the federation made some concessions to enroll the Boston Symphony. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions being imposed by the local boards. The Boston Symphony had demanded that it be allowed to go outside the Boston area for men it wanted in order to maintain its high standard. Hiring of foreign musicians is given individual consideration in the federation.

Eghteen locals, Mr. Petrillo said, agreed that he use his emergency powers to change the by-laws in this respect. "Personally," he said, of the change, "I think it is a very good law."

Negotiations, which lasted six months, were handled by Mr. Petrillo for the federation, Henry Cabot, trustee of the Boston Orchestral Association, and a committee of five men from the orchestra itself. Mr. Petrillo said the details of the symphony's membership in the Boston local was something between the local and the orchestra and that an agreement between the two parties was signed in Boston Thursday.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Three-Year Union Pact

Petrillo Announces Agreement Covering 105 Members of Orchestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Concession by Federation

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Negotiations lasted six months and were conducted by Petrillo for the union, Henry Cabit, trustee of the Boston organization, and a committee of five men from the orchestra.

"We are very happy to have the Boston Symphony in our federation," Petrillo said. "On both sides there was nothing but fairness and honesty, whatever we agree to we live up to."

Petrillo said that Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the symphony, did not enter personally into the negotiations, but that under the terms of the agreement he became a member of the union immediately. He said that the agreement between the Boston Symphony and Local 9-0, AF of M, was signed today in Boston.

The decision to amend the bylaws, Petrillo said, was reached Sept. 29 at a meeting in Petrillo's New York office of 18 locals throughout the country where symphony orchestras operate.

"I gave my story to them," Petrillo said, "and they voted unanimously that the president (Petrillo) use his emergency powers to amend the laws to permit symphony musicians to obtain employment in various jurisdictions, provided they are members of the AFM."

Petrillo said that the trustees of the Boston Symphony had informed him at the outset that they had sooner break up the orchestra than to lower its standards by submitting to a requirement which forced them to obtain permission from the union's local before a musician or conductor could be imported to Boston from other places.

"When I assured the management that I would change that law," Petrillo said, "they began to talk business."

The AFM president said the agreement would permit the Boston Symphony to make recordings and perform on the radio "after the dispute over recordings is ended." (He referred to the current ban on recordings which the AFM ordered Aug. 1 as a means of providing employment for more musicians.)

Petrillo said there were 60 symphony orchestras, of various grades, in the United States and Canada and that all now were in the federation.

For Duplicate Order Number
C-15
Asa L. Shipman's Sons
NEW YORK

[128]

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE REWIND